WASHINGTON, April 14 (AP).—Constitutionality of the Reed bill to regulate, through the joint action of State agencies, bus traffic through the Hudson River tunnel and the Philadelphia-Camden bridge, both being constructed, was questioned today before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee by Senator Cummins, Republican, Iowa, and Fred P. Thom of the Association of Railway Executives.

Senator Reed of Pennsylvania, author of the bill, declared he introduced it because he doubted if the Cummins national bus regulation measure would pass this session. He explained that when the tunnel and bridge are thrown open to the public there would be a great mass of uncontrolled traffic turned loose, as 3,000,000 automobiles are registered in the three States involved.

Senator Cummins declared the bill in effect would have Congress making regulations and delegating administrative authority to State agencies and he doubted its constitutionality.

The same view was taken by Mr. Thom, who said he was a disinterested party, but believed the Cummins bill could be modified to pass this session.

The Reed bill was supported by W. H. Speer, of the New Jersey Public Utilities Commission; A. B. Miller, of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, and Senator Edge, Republican, New Jersey.

Mr. Miller declared that as the law now stands no buses could be allowed over these interstate connections except by regulation and unless some law were passed to designate regulatory agencies there would be confusion and menace to public welfare.

Mr. Speer declared the tunnel and bridge were gateways for heavy traffic and unless something is done thousands of motor vehicles would be turned loose uncontrolled.

PRINCETON GIVES AID TO 440

Twenty Per Cent. of the Students Need Scholarships or Loans.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 14.—Figures on scholarships and remission of tuition given out by Secretary V. Lansing Collins today show that 20 per cent. of all Princeton men are dependent upon financial aid of this kind to defray college expenses.

The report for the current academic year shows that 440 students have received a total of $160,200, $103,782 of this being in scholarships and the remainder in remission of tuition. Sums loaned students on the latter basis are repayable after graduation, no interest being charged if payment is made on time. More than twice as many members of the freshman class received aid as any of the three upper classes.

REGISTRATION STIRS PHILADELPHIA VOTERS

PHILADELPHIA, April 14 (AP).—The spirited triangular fight for the Republican nomination for the United States Senate brought out a heavy enrolment of Philadelphia's unregistered voters today, the only registration day before the primary election on May 18.

Campaign managers of the three candidates — Senator George Wharton Pepper, Governor Pinchot and Representative William S. Vare—made unusual efforts to get the voters out. For an hour two airplanes, engaged by the Pepper headquarters and each carrying a woman passenger, circled over the city dropping literature emphasizing the importance of registering.

The registration booths did not close until 10 o'clock tonight and exact figures were not available. Estimates of political leaders placed the enrollment at more than 100,000. Those qualified to vote without registering today number 421,560.

W. L. Mellon, nephew of the Secretary of the Treasury, and an Allegheny County Republican leader, came here from Pittsburgh to watch the progress of registration and to confer with eastern leaders in the interest of Senator Pepper's candidacy and that of John S. Fisher, of Indiana County, for governor.

Mr. Fisher, who also was here today, predicted that he and Senator Pepper would sweep the western end of the State.

"We will come from Allegheny County," said Mr. Fisher, "with the greatest majorities ever given two candidates."

Harry A. Mackey, manager for Representative Vare, in a statement tonight, denied reports said to have been published in Pittsburgh that Mr. Vare would retire from the Senatorial race and that this was the cause of Mr. Mellon's visit to Philadelphia.

"Of course, the absurdity of such a statement is apparent," said Mr. Mackey. "As a matter of fact, it is a cheap political trick intended to influence organization ward leaders in Pittsburgh who are for Vare. The fact is that Mr. Mellon came to Philadelphia because of reports that the Pepper campaign here has fallen to pieces, and because he felt that, unless heroic treatment was applied, Pepper would indeed make a sorry showing here.

"Congressman Vare is in this fight to the finish. He is so far ahead of both Pepper and Pinchot that both camps are resorting to every form of desperate trickery to deceive the people."

He was born in Connecticut and was graduated from Amherst in 1877.

M'KINLEY'S DEFEAT PLEASES COURT FOES

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

"The people of Illinois have sent me to Washington for twenty years," said Senator McKinley. "In this primary I was recommended for renomination by all the Republican papers in Chicago. I was supported for re-election by nearly all of the daily down-State papers. The only pronounced opposition that I know of was by the Hearst papers and those papers whose editors are on the State payroll of the Small-Smith combination. I was endorsed by nearly all of the church societies, women's clubs and organizations of that character.

"I thank my friends for their confidence in me. I am content."

Borah to Keep Up Fight.

In a statement he gave to newspapers, Senator Borah indicated his intention to go before the country in opposition to the World Court, which he termed "the League Court." While he did not make any announcement to that effect, he is expected to attack Senators who voted for the World Court resolution.

In his recent Western visit, during which he attacked the World Court in Mr. McKinley's State, Mr. Borah also entered Wisconsin, where Senator Lenroot will have a hard fight to obtain renomination. The anti-Court feeling among the German population of Wisconsin is very strong, while the faction of the Republican Party led by Senator La Follette is out for Mr. Lenroot's scalp. Senator La Follette, like his late father, is vigorously anti-Court.

"Illinois has indexed the sentiment in this country against the League Court," said Senator Borah. "It is easy to define here in Washington, to discuss here the force and effect of reservations. But before the people this is a League Court, dominated and controlled by the League. In other words, they exercise common sense. It is another instance of leaders underestimating the intelligence of the voter. The people of this country are becoming impatient with this program of seeing how far we can get into European politics without letting the people know it.

"The Republican Party would do well to consider getting back to the policies and principles upon which it was first nourished and under which it acquired its leadership and secured the confidence of the American people.

"The campaign against the Court will go forward as promised immediately after the vote in the Senate. We have no intention of ceasing our efforts until the matter is settled in the forum from which there is no appeal—until it is settled, and settled right."

Reed Credits Defeat to World Court.

"The result in Illinois can be attributed to Senator McKinley's vote for the World Court," said Senator Reed. "Personally, Senator McKinley is popular in the Senate and in his own State. His campaign was abundantly financed and his forces well organized. He appeared on the basis of his regularity as a Republican and vigorously protested his loyalty to President Coolidge. Such arguments naturally would be very effective in a strong Republican State like Illinois.

"Clearly the voters are determined to adhere to the policies of Washington. They will not tolerate any interference with American rights by foreign powers, and they have no desire to interfere with the policies of other countries so long as our rights are not invaded. The American voter has not been inoculated with the damnable virus of internationalism."

The overwhelming victory of Mr. Brennan in the Democratic Senatorial primary foreshadows the injection of the wet and dry question into the contest over election to the Senate between Mr. Brennan and Colonel Smith. Modification of the Volstead law is Mr. Brennan's chief issue. He has announced that he intends to tour the State, and, in spite of the marked Republican tendencies of Illinois, it is obvious that Mr. Brennan, who is resourceful and a noted organizer, will give Colonel Smith a real battle.

Colonel Smith will be obliged to take the dry side of the contest. The only difference in that respect between his candidacy and that of Senator McKinley for the Senatorial nomination was that Senator McKinley got the backing of prohibition organizations, although Colonel Smith made no bones of his dry sentiments.

Illinois Politicians Turn to Platforms.

CHICAGO, April 14.—Politicians cleaning up the fag ends of yesterday's primaries focussed their attention today on the State conventions at Springfield April 23. With Colonel Frank L. Smith winner of the Republican Senatorial nomination by more than 122,000 plurality, the Republicans will have an anti-World Court plank as the main feature of their platform.

The Democrats, with George Brennan at the head of the ticket, will use anti-Volsteadism as their great appeal. There will be home rule and other planks of various sorts, but these are the two chief items on which the rival parties will make their campaigns.

Complete figures today tended to scale down somewhat the pluralities indicated by the early returns, but did not diminish the clean sweep made by the Crowe-Barrett ticket on the big county jobs over the Deneen slate.

Final figures on Cook County give Colonel Smith a plurality of 82,908 over Senator McKinley. The vote was: Smith, 347,106; McKinley, 194,200. Down State Smith's plurality continued to grow. With 536 of the 6,053 precincts in Illinois missing, Smith had an actual lead of 122,042 in the State. The vote stood: Smith, 538,915; McKinley, 466,873.

For State Treasurer, Garrett Kinney is leading William J. Stratton, the Lundin-Small candidate, by 45,000 votes, as 4,546 precincts out of 6,053 give Kinney, 323,243; Stratton, 278,018.

George E. Brennan, running for the Democratic nomination on a wet platform, rolled up a vote three times the size of that cast for both his opponents.

With the results certain in nearly all districts, it was apparent tonight that probably every one of Illinois's twenty-seven members of Congress, except Frank H. Funk, in the Seventeenth District, had been renominated. The number of contests was small, particularly on the Democratic side, and a large majority of the State's delegation in the lower house at Washington won hands down. The wet and dry issue did not enter into the primary contest nearly so much as it will in the second battle.

Representative Fred A. Britten of the Ninth District won the most spectacular battle in the State by defeating Mrs. Bertha Baur approximately 3 to 1.

With boxing now legalized in this city as a result of the overwhelming majority at the polls yesterday, Governor Small announced today that he would name within ten days the members of the commission which will have jurisdiction over the sport.

SOLDIERS ON GUARD KEEP HERRIN QUIET

RIVAL TICKETS IN FIELD

Authorities Fear More Clashes Between Klansmen and Their Foes if Soldiers Leave.

HERRIN, Ill., April 14.—This turbulent centre of "Bloody Williamson" County is a smoldering mine of political, racial, religious and plain old-time feud hatreds tonight, while bayonets and machine guns, for the eighth time in four years, keep a temporary peace.

Some say that the six men killed in yesterday's election riots were the victims of feeling dating back to the "bloody vendetta" of thirty-odd years ago. The most reliable information appears to be that the tragedy was the outgrowth of a political fight for control of this section of the State, and that the fighting is not yet over.

The soldiers will remain, it is given out, "for an indefinite period." Certainly they will stay over next Tuesday, for there is an Aldermanic election that day in which both the Klansmen and their foes have tickets in the field.

Another disturbing element is the report circulated in Herrin and in Marion that "they," meaning the anti-Klansmen, "didn't get the men they intended to get, but they aren't discouraged."

The inquest into the deaths of the men killed yesterday has been set for Friday. Coroner George Bell impaneled a jury today. The jurors viewed the bodies so that the funerals might proceed. The State's Attorney, Art C. Boswell, has issued an edict barring newspaper men from this inquest.

Three of the men killed yesterday were Klansmen and three anti-Klansmen. A report from Marion says a seventh man was shot dead in the fighting while sitting in one of the three automobiles driven by the raiders, that his body was carried away to keep his identity secret and that an unsuccessful attempt to bury him was made last night. Efforts to verify this statement proved futile.

Klansmen charge that the three anti-Klan men killed were imported gunmen, specially deputized by Sheriff Galligan. The Sheriff disowns them.

Evangelist Offers to Go to Herrin.

HATTIESBURG, Miss., April 14 (AP).—Howard S. Williams, Hattiesburg evangelist, who is conducting a revival at Pensacola, Fla., told The Hattiesburg American over the telephone today that he was ready to return to Herrin, Ill., and to try to restore order there, if his presence was desired. Eleven months ago Mr. Williams, during a revival meeting at Herrin, brought about peace that lasted until yesterday.

Mr. Williams already has made arrangements with the army and navy aviation bases at Pensacola to take him to the Illinois town by airplane of his presence is considered necessary.

"I have telegraphed friends and officials in Herrin," the evangelist said, "that if I can do anything in the world toward restoring quiet and order there I will gladly return. I am in the midst of the biggest revival of my career, but I am willing to close it for a day or two if I can be of any assistance in Herrin."

CHICAGO, April 14 (AP).—A gift of $100,000 to aid cancer research conducted for many years at the University of Chicago by Miss Maude Slye was announced today.

The fund, a bequest by E. F. Holmes, was announced by Miss Harriet F. Holmes, his daughter, who has been associated with Miss Slye in her work. Miss Slye's research experiments have tended to discount the germ theory of cancer.

FOG BLINDED NORGE ON FLIGHT TO OSLO

Two Passengers on the Airship Tell of the Difficulties of Flying Over North Sea.

But the Dirigible Rode Smoothly in the Air and There Was No "Seasickness" Aboard.

ON BOARD THE DIRIGIBLE NORGE OF THE AMUNDSEN-ELLSWORTH-NOBILE EXPEDITION, April 14—Our course on leaving Pulham on Monday, midnight, was set direct for Christiansand, Norway, but after driving all night we were surprised to see land ahead at 6:30 o'clock this morning.

We soon discovered that the west wind had driven us to the southeast of our course and we were now over Nissum Lighthouse on Jutland, south of Limfjord. As soon as we realized this and got our bearings we laid a course for Christiansand. But the weather was misty and the wind continued, with the result that we next saw land over Torungen Lighthouse on the Norwegian coast at 10:15 o'clock this morning.

From Torungen we followed the coast line to Oslo, passing over the various towns, where eager throngs were waving handkerchiefs, hats and flags. We were flying low enough to observe these demonstrations of enthusiasm. It seemed as if all Norway had taken a holiday to cheer us on.

Life on board the Norge is a unique experience. With no cooks or kitchen facilities, our only warm food is tea and cofee in thermos bottles. This is accompanied by army rations and chocolate. The only two chairs on the dirigible are occupied by the navigators. The Italians provided themselves with campstools, but we Norwegians are much too heavy for them. I alone broke three in an effort to get some repose.

Lack of space forced us to limit personal baggage to a minimum. Each passenger carried a small valise scarcely biggen than a lady's handbag, containing only absolute essentials.

There was not much chance to sleep. In fact, I believe that nobody slept on the journey between Julham and Oslo. Nevertheless, we must depart again tonight to take advantage of the exceptionally favorable weather.

Needless to say, we Norwegian members of the expedition, after many weeks of absence, would like a chance to take a longer farewell of our families and friends before continuing on the trip to the Pole and Alaska, but all gladly acquiesce in any decision which favors the chances of final success for the expedition, whereof all are confident.

One comforting fact is that there has been no seasickness aboard. The Norge rides smoother than a ship on southern seas, with only a gentle rise and fall as air currents waft us.

ITALIAN GIVES EXPERIENCES.

OSLO, Norway, April 14.—The Norge yesterday evening again took to the air to accomplish the second lap of its flight to the North Pole. After the 3,000-kilometer flight from Rome to Pulham in record time, Colonel Nobile gave the immense airship no rest, only stopping at the British field long enough to take on the necessary food, gas and oil, and, with the shouts of a large crowd which had gathered despite the lateness of the hour, the Italian dirigible gracefully ascended at 11 P. M. exact and left soon afterward.

Immediately on reaching Yarmouth we discovered that at a height of 1,000 feet the atmosphere was perfectly calm, but the temperature was quite low, which at dawn descended to below zero. Colonel Nobile, who would have liked to profit by the favorable weather conditions to extend the second lap from Pulham to Leningrad in one jump, acceded to the wishes of the Norwegians and headed the Norge for Oslo, where the ship was being awaited patiently by the Norwegian sovereigns themselves, who personally would present their national flag to it. The flag will be thrown from the ship together with the Italian and American flags on the exact spot marking the North Pole. The present stage of the journey has presented certain difficulties, because there is no airdrome at Oslo. A mast had been prepared there to receive the Norge.

It was only a few moments before we took air at Pulham that the weather expert of our expedition received reports showing that three days of good weather could be expected.

During the night we made a speed of 100 kilometers an hour, while below us an agitated sea surged and roared. At 6 o'clock we saw the first land—Denmark—and a little later we made out the town of Limfjord. As we speeded on to Oslo a heavy fog developed and completely blinded us. Nothing is more disturbing than an experience of this kind in air. This lasted about three hours, when finally the sun succeeded in penetrating the fog and we recognized before us the Norwegian coast.

From this moment the voyage of the Norge was one of triumph. We navigated at a low altitude, and as we passed over each of the little habitations on the island of the fjords the entire population looked up and waving flags shouted a welcome to us.

At 12:30 P. M. Oslo came in sight and a soft Springlike atmosphere succeeded the frigid one which we experienced during the night, although snow could be seen on the mountainside and the forests near by.

The Norge descended as low as possible to salute the City of Oslo, already on holiday for the occasion. We heard the military band playing before the royal palace, and on the grand stairway of the palace we saw with our glasses King Haakon VI himself. He saluted us with his hat.

One hundred thousand persons and the entire garrison of the army awaited us at the aviation field where we descended.

For several hours the Norge flew above the city, giving the population a close view of our wonderful ship. At 4 o'clock we threw out our landing cables, which later anchored us to the mast. We had within the space of twelve hours covered 1,200 kilometers.

We shall leave tonight for Leningrad, where we expect to arrive before noon tomorrow.

COPENHAGEN, Denmark, April 14.—As a result of reports of an early start yesterday from Pulham, England, the arrival of the Norge over Copenhagen was expected last night, and before midnight people began watching for the airship in the starlit sky. However, when messages of the postponement to midnight of the departure began to trickle in it was realized that the passage over the Danish capital could not take place till after dawn.

Early risers read in the morning papers reports of Colonel Nobile's statement that the Norge would follow a direct route from England to Norway, and consequently would not pass over Copenhagen at all. Still, the Norge did pass over Danish territory. About 7 o'clock this morning the airship was sighted at Tyboron. It followed the coast north, having probably taken this course to be in sight of land.

The Norge here flew very low, and, despite the fog at this time of day the airship itself was not only clearly visible but also it was possible to read the inscription "Norge" on her side.

The airship, however, was not sighted at other places on the Danish west coast, where people had been on the lookout the whole night, especially at the lighthouse on the Skaw.

RIGA, April 14.—The Academy of Science of Leningrad has formed a special committee under the Chairmanship of M. Stekloff to render help to the Amundsen-Ellsworth-Nobile polar expedition.

M. Gorbunoff, the Chairman of the Soviet Trans-Arctic Commission, has arrived in Leningrad to participate in the reception to the Norge. The management of the State theatres in Leningrad are arranging special gala performances.

As the Norge might descend in Murmansk the Soviet authorities have sent instructions to the local authorities to prepare the emergency landing facilities there.

The wireless stations have been called on to assist by systematic reports on the weather.

Messages from Leningrad state that a special reception committee has already proceeded to the Trotsky airdrome, where the final preparations for the arrival of the Norge were urgently proceeding.

During the whole night special detachments from the Aviation School were on guard in the neighborhood.

The Soviet authorities announce that a detachment of Soviet airplanes will fly out to meet the Norge and that the whole route has been carefully prepared to ensure conducting the explorers to Leningrad without a hitch.

The authorities express the hope that they can induce the Norge to undertake demonstration cruises above Leningrad to stmulate the interest of Soviet citizens in aviation.

TRONDHJEM, Norway, April 14.—Captain Roald Amundsen was greeted by cheering crowds all along the way rom Oslo, particularly at Lillehammer, where 200 gathered outside his window and where he got the news that the Norge, the airship of his polar expedition, had left Pulham for Norway.

There was also a crowd at the Trondhjem pier, including 200 students of the Technical University, to say goodbye as the veteran explorer and Lincoln Ellsworth left by ship for King's Bay, Spitzbergen, where they will join the other members of the expedition.

AMUNDSEN'S AIRSHIP SAILS FOR LENINGRAD

when they steered for the Norwegian coast at Christiansand. They were also handicapped by fog in crossing the Skagerrack, so that the coast of Norway was not sighted until 10:15 A. M.

Reports that the Norge's voyage is being hastened for fear that Commander Byrd will accomplish the polar flight first were ridiculed by the expedition. They said that Leningrad is the Norge's a European base and that prudence requires that they get the airship safely to its hangar there in the quickest possible time. Mooring masts are considered unsafe unless the weather is ideal. Furthermore, the Norge cannot leave Leningrad until the landing crew reaches King's Bay, and despite the Norge's expedited trip, no change has been made in the plan to have the land crew leave Oslo on Saturday to embark aboard the cruiser Heimdal at Hammerfest on April 22, reaching King's Bay about April 26.

It is thought unlikely that the Norge will leave Leningrad before May 1.

The Norge is the first dirigible ever to visit Norway and has already, it is declared, beaten all flight records for semi-rigids.

Norge Salutes Amundsen's Home.

OSLO, Norway, April 14 (AP).—The dirigible Norge dipped her flag in greeting when passing Amundsen's house, on the fjord, six miles from Oslo.

King Haakon made observations from the windows of the palace, while the members of Parliament, Premier Lykke, former Premier Mowinckel and other prominent officials were on the roof of the Storthing. It was a holiday for the school children, while thousands of automobiles stood in long files on the roads leading to the landing place.

Royal guardsmen were ready to assist in the landing under the direction of Italian air officers and engineers, while a squadron of cavalry kept the spectators at a safe distance.

The Norge came soaring over the landing field accompanied by three naval planes, which circled the huge ship like gulls. The dirigible turned and faced the palace, saluting the King, then flew thrice over the capital, for the purpose of getting low enough for mooring. Without difficulty the Norge tied up to the mooring mast, and a welcome was extended by War Secretary Wefring.

MUSSOLINI HEADS MOTOR CAVALCADE

TRIPOLI, April 14.—No theatrical extravaganza could have been more beautiful, nor carefully arranged stage effect more colorfully perfect than the tableau which greeted Premier Mussolini at noon today as his motor caravan, exhausts barking, speeded into Homs, 125 kilometers up the coast from Tripoli. Homs is near the site of the Phoenician city of Leptis Magnus, originally captured by Julius Caesar.

The Premier's high-speed caravan had had a hard drive even for it. It had been racing at top speed across the desert for nearly three hours. It left Tripoli early in the morning and the first halt was a famous oasis containing an ancient desert market "suk-el-jemma" (camel market), where 1,500 Arabs gave the Fascist salute. The oasis is a forest of tall date palms and white Arab huts nestle underneath.

Then Mussolini personally took the wheel of his auto and led the caravan in the fastest spurt it had yet had. He remained at the wheel for forty kilometers, his speed often being fifty to sixty miles an hour, and normal cars had difficulty in keeping up with him.

Picturesque Scenes at Homs.

The white outlines of the Moorish fortifications of Homs was sighted shortly before noon. Leading his flying cavalcade—like a chief of old—Mussolini dashed through the arched gates while the guns of the Italian citadel began booming a saluta, which was taken up by scores of desert drums and tomtoms. From a square in the centre of the city came the sound of voices crying, "Rai! rai! rai!" mingled with the weird whine of Arab bagpipes, shrill desert flutes and horns as dervishes with drums shouted their tribal songs.

Figures, some in white, some in blue, crowded the roofs of all buildings in sight. Throngs of others stood in the streets, their arms raised in the Fascisti salute. Rich Arab carpets and tapestries draped many upper balconies in sharp relief against the white walls. Italian flags fluttered at every point of vantage. Overhead the sky was blue, and at the end of one street could be seen the blue sea.

The chief presented to Mussolini a black stallion, saddled with black velvet trimmed with silver. In making the presentation he called the Premier: "Vivifier of men, distributer of courage, water come to quench the thirst of the dry African land."

The chief's face shone and his eyes sparkled as Mussolini replied. Mussolini unbent more than usual and smiled a number of times. He said:

"This gift is most acceptable. I love the horse, which is the symbol of force and speed, and will ride it in Rome while thinking of your fidelity."

Visits Leptis Magnus.

After dinner Mussolini visited the ruins of the biblical city Leptis Magnus, two miles away, one of the best preserved ruined cities on the Mediterranean. During Christ's time it was an important trading centre. It was founded by Phoenicians coming from Sidon and became famous as the birthplace of the Emperor Septimus Severus, who beautified it and built a magnificent palace, forum, baths, &c. The Arabs partly destroyed it in the fourth century. Since then it has lain covered in the sands until last year when the Italians excavated a large city with many ruins in a remarkable state of preservation.

Mussolini went through it as if on an inspection trip, descending into dungeons and climbing monuments. He did not spend more than half an hour seeing the entire city.

A company of Fascist militia staged a beautiful spectacle. When Mussolini appeared in the forum the spectators raised their eyes and saw black shirted militiamen, their arms outstretched, holding daggers, point down, at the top of every column and every elevated point. It seemed as if a magician had suddenly replaced the statues of antiquity on their old pedestals.

Although he did not take the wheel again, Mussolini ordered his chauffeur to set a breakneck pace back to Tripoli.

This ends organized trips to the interior. Mussolini plans to spend tomorrow in Tripoli, where he will entertain the foreign correspondents at tea. He sails for Italy at midnight.

INCORPORATES ESTATE TO AVOID BRITISH TAX

LONDON, April 14.—The Duke of Portland has turned himself into a limited liability company. The Welbeck Estates Company, Ltd., with a capital of £750,000, has been formed to take over the ownership and management of the Duke's great estates, which include the historic Welbeck Abbey.

Four other heads of Ducal families have transformed their estates into companies in the last three years, as a counter move to the enormous taxation and death duties which the landowners have to face. They are the Dukes of Leinster, Grafton, Buccleuch and Rutland.

The Duke of Portland began the dispersal of his vast landed estates in 1921. He was then the registered owner of nearly 200,000 acres and half a dozen noble residences. Little, however, was disposed of. He had made the same announcement to his tenants at Welbeck two years before and then nothing came of it.

Welbeck Abbey is the seat of the Dukes of Portland with its underground passages, which seemed to confirm the story that the fifth Duke, after his reported death in 1879, had emerged into the world as Thomas Charles Druce, whose grandson, George Hollanby Druce, sought to recover title and estates from the present Duke twenty years ago and failed. The coffin, supposed to contain lead, was found to hold the body of the present Duke's grandfather.

LOS ANGELES FLIES; THEN ENTERS HANGAR

Plans for Another Trip Today Are Called Off on Word of Approaching Storm.

LAKEHURST, N. J., April 14.—The Navy airship Los Angeles is safe in her hangar tonight after a successful two and one-half-hour flight to Point Pleasant and Asbury Park. It was her second flight since the wreck of the Shenandoah.

Predictions by Lieut. J. B. Anderson, aerologist at the Air Station, that a 40-mile wind with rain would set in tonight caused Captain G. W. Steele Jr. to turn his ship into the hangar. It had been planned to attach her to the mooring mast, and to go on another flight tomorrow. The next practice flight will probably not take place until Monday, Captain Steele said.

Forty-nine men were in the cabins of the Los Angeles when at 3:14 she rose gently from her mooring mast and headed southeast with brilliant sunshine glinting on her covering. She appeared over her hangar again shortly after 4 o'clock, and landed gracefully at 4:35, with the entire station force of 300 men pulling her down.

Many of the men in the ground crew, Captain Steele explained, are as yet relatively untrained in handling dirigibles, and need frequent landings for experience. At 5:10 the Los Angeles had been hauled into her hangar and her crew was clambering down from the cabins.

Today's flight was in charge of Lieut. Commander Charles M. Rosendahl, who will succeed to the command of the Los Angeles when Captain Steele is transferred from the station. Captain Steele said Rosendahl had made "a brilliant landing," and had given a skilful performance in handling the ship while in the air.

Among the passengers was Congressman Stewart Appleby of New Jersey, a captain in the Marine Reserves. Mr. Appleby predicted that dirigibles would displace heavier than air transportation.

WASHINGTON, April 14 (AP).—Referring to reports that the gas bags of the dirigible Los Angeles are unsafe, Senator Copeland, Democrat, New York, introduced a resolution today asking Secretary Wilbur to investigate. Senator Copeland said that he assumed "our navy would not permit the use of a dirigible which is not safe," but thought the Secretary should have opportunity to deny officially reports to the contrary.

WILKINS'S INJURY KEEPS HIM FROM AIR

Polar Airman Will Not Fly Again Until Swelling of Hand Subsides.

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, April 14 (AP).—Captain George H. Wilkins, leading his aerial expedition in search of land in the Arctic Ocean, announced today that he would not take the air again until his right hand, hurt on Saturday, heals.

His hand is still swollen. It was caught in the running gear under the airplane Alaskan, when Captain Wilkins was guiding the machine after it had descended on a lagoon at Point Barrow, 550 miles northwest of here. While returning to Fairbanks on Sunday from Barrow after the second of two trips carrying supplies, Wilkins navigated with hi left hand. Lieutenant Carl Eielson, the pilot, was with him.

With fog closing in over the ice of the Arctic Ocean and with new ice beginning to recede from the shore, they suggested that an early dash may becom imperative for the main flight from Point Barrow in which they are expected, if they do not sight land, to pass near the North Pole and over to Spitzbergen.

In that case, they added, the Alaskan might make no further flights until after the Detroiter, the other plane brought North by the expedition, has been repaired and flown to Barrow.

The Alaskan carried 400 gallons of gasoline to Barrow. Other supplies have been stored there.

NEW YORK, April 15—The Fine Art of Dress is a theme. It is not a group of unrelated articles haphazardly assembled. It should be a harmonious, hang-together reflection of a key pattern or a central color.

That is why so many men like matched accessories of dress. These cannot possibly strike a discordant note. They save wondering and worrying about what to wear with what.

Choose four-in-hand, bow-knot tie and handkerchief in sets of the identical color and pattern. Rich foulard silk: Polka-dots, figures and all-over motifs. Exclusive, but not expensive.

RUMANIAN LIBERALS FEARED OVERTHROW

Intrigued to Bring About Abdication of Carol, His Nationalist Supporters Charge.

POISONED THE KING'S MIND

In view of the conflicting reports concerning the troublous political situation in Rumania, and its threatened repercussions in Southeastern Europe, THE NEW YORK TIMES recently sent a staff correspondent to Bucharest to ascertain the exact facts. The fourth of a series of articles from the correspondent follows.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUCHAREST, April 2.—Three things combined last year to threaten the foundations of the Liberal Party's domination of Rumania and to bring to a head the struggle between the old kingdom and the new territories for control of the source of power, the Crown.

First, the Bessarabian peasants and the Transylvanian Nationalists, joining hands, won the elections for the rural councils. It was the first time that the party in power had so failed. It was an ominous sign of popular discontent, for these elections were no less crooked and corrupt than previous ones in Rumania. It was the more ominous for the Liberals, for their term of office expired in March and Parliamentary elections, far more important, would then have to be held.

Second, the health of King Ferdinand, upon whose favor the Liberals depended for control of politics, became alarming in the Autumn.

Third, Crown Prince Carol became more open and more bitter in his denunciations of Premier Bratiano and the Liberal régime. It was clear that if Ferdinand died the balance of power would shift with Carol to the Opposition.

Drama of Carol's Abdication.

It was in these circumstances that the drama of Carol's abdication came to a close.

Shortly after an interview, in which Carol criticized the existing régime with particular violence, he was sent to London to represent the royal family at the funeral of Queen Alexandra. According to the official version, he was joined abroad by Mme. Lupescu, a Rumanian woman, the heroine of his latest affair, and acted in a manner to disgrace his family. The King ordered him to leave her and return to Rumania. Carol, in a temper, telegraphed back, abdicating.

This verson is supported by the Liberal Party. Carol has a notorious weakness for sentimental adventures, and the Liberals carry on an organized propaganda campaign to blacken his reputation now by emphasizing these scandals as sufficient to account for his abdication.

An instance: I talked with one of the Ministers of Bratiano's late Cabinet, who has become notoriously wealthy in office. He is always referred to, even by his partisans, as "the Pig." He is short, with an enormous paunch and heavy flabby jowls; he looks 70. Before I saw him I was told his reputation for amorous adventures, which is far more unsavory than Carol's. He told me at great length of Carol's "scandalous" career, which unfitted him for the crown.

"Such adventures with women," he said, "may be supported—even in one of my age and position. But they must be carried on discreetly."

Queen Marie, strangely enough, maintains much the same attitude toward her son, speaking of him now in Bucharest Court society as a "bad boy."

On the other hand these attacks have given rise to an organized scandal campaign against the Queen, on the part of certain friends of Carol and enemies of Prince Stirbey. The old gossip conecting the two has been revived and brought down to date with great gusto by a newspaper, Epoca, recently founded for the purpose of proving that Prince Stirbey is the Gray Eminence really responsible for the abdication. The friends of the editor, Mr. Filipescu, point out that he is the scion of an old and patriotic Rumanian family. His enemies say his campaign is due to an old feud between the two.

Nationalists Call Scandal "Frame-Up."

There can be no doubt of Prince Stirbey's enormous wealth and power, and few people in Bucharest question either that his relations with Queen Marie have been decidedly intimate or that Carol disapproved of them. To prove with facts instead of hearsay the popular story that these scandals were the exclusive or the real cause of Carol's abdication is, however, quite another thing.

The code of sex morals in Bucharest, moreover, is so easy that it is difficult to give much weight to scandals in such grave matters of state as the abdication of a Crown Prince. They are more likely to be instruments than causes.

There is reason to suspect that there is some truth in the theory of Carol's political friends, the Nationalists, that the scandal, officially said to have led to his abdication, was a frame-up, engineered for that purpose by the Liberal régime, determined to get rid of him. Carol had already shown that if one wanted to make him abdicate the best way was to attack him through his heart. Whether Mme. Lupescu was thrown in his arms, as the Nationalists allege, would be difficult to prove. They are on firmer and more important ground when they point out that the Government could have prevented the scandal, which they now condemn with such unnatural fervor.

Mme. Lupescu's relations with Carol were known. The Government which had kept Carol from seeing his morganatic wife could have kept Mme. Lupescu from joining Carol by not giving her a passport. Instead, she was allowed to follow him a few days after he left.

The was deliberately sent, some Nationalists say. Then, they continue, the palace coterie began to poison the King's mind against his son. False reports of Carol's conduct were sent him from abroad.

All this, it must be admitted, is quite possible in the Balkanic atmosphere of intrigue in Bucharest. Witness the failure of Premier Vaida-Voevod's dispatch announcing the recognition of the annexation of Bessarabia to reach the King, who was then persuaded to dismiss instead of congratulate his absent minister. Again, one Rumanian noble, no doubt to impress me with the reliability of his inside information, assured me with great glee that he often read the official secret mail of the Minister in Bucharest of one of the great powers, before it reached the Minister himself.

Intrigues Common in Bucharest.

By these intrigues the Nationalists allege the ground was prepared by Bratiano and the Liberals for another misunderstanding and flare-up between the King and the Crown Prince. This grave charge is not lightly to be dismissed. Intrigues of this kind are a common means of attaining political as well as other ends in Bucharest. Such methods are much more in the tradition of Rumania than those of constitutional government.

The intriguing mentality, as has been shown, has been bred in the bone of the ruling class of the old kingdom by all their previous historical development. The Liberals who compose that ruling class were in power, the basis of their power was threatened by the Crown Prince, they had strong motive to remove him, they had used intrigue to protect themselves from less dangers, it would be surprising if they abandoned their customary tactics at this critical point.

But, granted they did, there are sins of omission as of commission. One may plausibly argue that the natural temperament, both of Ferdinand and Carol, is sufficient to explain the abdication. It was the highest duty, then, of their advisers to protect them against themselves, above all to assure the prestige of the Crown and its smooth transmission. Bratiano and the Liberals were, and still are, the most trusted advisers of King Ferdinand. They had shown their enormous influence over him on more than one occasion.

It would indeed be difficult to show any instance where he had acted contrary to their selfish interests. The Bratiano Government, moreover, alone had the ear of the King at this time, for the news of Carol's abdication was kept secret from the Opposition leaders for several days—almost until, in the Crown Council, they were presented practically with a fait accompli. There is nothing to show that the Liberals used their privil-ged position to prevent the abdication.

The damaging fact remains that once more the King followed a policy in accordance only with the selfish interests of the Liberals and directly contrary to those of the nation and the Crown itself. After having split his kingdom regionally and diminished his prestige by putting them in exclusive power, Ferdinand, by lightly accepting the abdication of his son, consolidated their position, deepened the existing split and endangered the transmission of his crown.

Crook Sells Stinnes Auto Machinery as Junk and Spends Money, Leaving Only Bare Walls

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, April 14.—After the Aga Automobile Works had been made a victim in the disintegration process of the mammoth Stinnes concern, had figured in the feud between Edmond Stinnes and the remainder of the family and then had been handed over to the bankruptcy court, it has now suffered further ignominy by having its valuable special machinery taken by a crook.

With the aid of accomplices this individual removed it as old iron and failed even to pay old iron prices.

August Rentzer, the ex-crook who engineered the removal of the machinery and sold it to other firms at low prices, no longer has the money which he received for the life blood of the Aga works. In less than a year it was spent on riotous living and he was taken to jail, with a butcher, a baker and a tailor on his heels.

Now all that remains of the Aga concern, a typical monument of the mighty Stinnes trust which rose up as German currency fell and which itself crumbled when the money was stabilized, is the walls of the building which harbored a hive of industry.

CARDINAL CERRETTI TO BE CHICAGO LEGATE

MILAN, Italy, April 14 (AP).—Cardinal Bonaventura Cerretti, Papal Nuncio in Paris, will be appointed Papal Legate to the Eucharistic Congress in Chicago in June, the Corriere della Sera says today.

The paper says that Mgr. Hans Samper, Papal majordomo, and Mgr. Caccia-Dominioni, Papal Master of the Household, both of whom have been mentioned for the Cardinalate, will receive the red hat.

The Corriere adds that others who may be appointed Cardinals are Mgr. Carlo Perosi, Assessor of the Holy Office; Mgr. Luigi Capotosti, Secretary of the Congregation of the Sacraments; Mgr. Lorenzo Lauri, Nuncio to Poland, and Mgr. Francesco Marchetti-Selvaggiani, Secretary of the Congregation of the Propaganda.

Cardinal Cerretti was formerly Apostolic Delegate to the United States. He was then an Archbishop. He left Washington several years ago and was made a Cardinal last December.

SWIFT PACE FOR HOTEL MEN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 14.—Three hundred American hotel men will have tomorrow the most strenuous day of a very strenuous week in this country.

Their itinerary includes a complete tour of Oxford College and a trip to Stratford-on-Avon, where a reception will be given them by the Mayor and Corporation. Back in London by 7 P. M., they will be entertained at gala dinners by the principal London restaurants and then at 10:30 they will go to Lansdowne House for a reception and ball, which Gordon Selfridge is giving in their honor.

MANCHESTER, April 14 (AP).—Thomas D. Green, President of the American Hotel Association, and other hotel men who are making a tour of Europe, were received by the Lord Mayor at the Town Hall here today.

The ranks of the visiting hotel men have been somewhat thinned by the mile-a-minute schedule arranged by their hosts, and some of the party remained to rest in London. They said that sightseeing was wearing them out more than staying at home and attending to business.

The party visited Liverpool and York yesterday, going to Chester and Manchester today.

ZIONISM IS DEBATED BY JUDGE AND RABBI

Judge Julian W. Mack of the United States Circuit Court opposed Rabbi Isaac Landman of the Temple Israel, Far Rockaway, in a debate on Zionism last night at a smoker of the Men's Club of the Free Synagogue, 40 West Sixty-eighth Street, the former speaking as a Zionist and Rabbi Landman as a non-Zionist. Interest ran high throughout the discussion, although no vote was taken at its conclusion.

Judge Mack pictured the upbuilding of Palestine and the establishment there of a Jewish majority as a necessity to the development of Jewish culture and outstanding Jewish contributions to the world. He declared that Zionism sought that end as rapidly as possible. The Jews were the only people in the world without a home, with the exception of the gypsies, he said, and while they did not plan to withhold political rights from other peoples who might live in Palestine, the Jewish majority was necessary. He denied that he sought particularly a Jewish Free State or objected to Palestine's being a dominion of an empire, but sought a home or centre for Jews and their culture.

Rabbi Landman declared that Zionists pictured non-Zionists as opponents of the upbuilding of Palestine, but denied the truth of this. Every Jew desired rehabilitation of Palestine, but the fault with Zionism, he declared, was the political element.

"The greatest contribution of the Jew to the world has been cultural and religious rather than political," he said. "He must remain a man of the entire world, and the future of the Jewish people cannot be tied up in the segregation of a small group in Palestine. When the political implications of Zionism is removed I will work with the Zionists, but not until that time."

FIRE ON ROOF OF THEATRE.

One thousand persons in the Rialto Theatre on Seventh Avenue and Forty-second Street were undisturbed yesterday while employes turned in a fire alarm and other employes extinguished a fire in some canvas on the roof of the building.

The patrons of the theatre were unaware that a red hot bolt had been dropped by a structural worker engaged in erecting a refrigeration plant on the roof, igniting a tarpaulin. George Ashton, superintendent of the work, gave the alarm and instructed ushers and attendants to prevent any one coming into the theatre to alarm the spectators of the motion picture. The firemen arrived without sounding sirens or bells, and found the fire extinguished without the theatre's patrons aware of what had transpired.

Untermyer Hits Webb-Loomis Bill.

Samuel Untermyer, in a letter sent yesterday to Senator Knight, Chairman of the Committee on Rules, declared that the Webb-Loomis bill to regulate the practice of medicine and discipline the members of the medical profession was "vicious in many aspects" and placed too much power in the hands of a lay body which would be authorized to discipline physicians.

ITALIAN DEBT VOTE SET FOR WEDNESDAY

Opponents Give Way to Demand for Action on the Compact Without Further Delay.

RATIFICATION IS EXPECTED

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Ratification of the Italian debt agreement next Wednesday was indicated in the Senate today when an agreement was reached to take a vote at that time. Senator Reed, Democrat, of Missouri, one of the opponents, who declared the settlement "a species of international grand larceny," said he would not object to the agreement, but would have done so if he had been assured of enough Senators standing with him to force the measure to await consideration until next December.

The arrangement for a vote was reached by unanimous consent after a short discussion. Senator Fess, Republican, of Ohio, defended the terms of the settlement and declared that President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon were justified in approving it.

The Democratic leader, Senator Robinson of Arkansas, who favors delaying action, stated that the collection of the amounts due from Italy would have to depend upon that country's collection of reparations from Germany.

"If Germany should default in its payments under the Dawes plan," said Mr. Robinson, "this Government would not be able to collect the full amount as agreed to, and it might become necessary to revise that plan."

Senator Smoot first tried to have a vote taken this week, but objection was made by Senator Reed until the date was fixed for 4 o'clock next Wednesday afternoon. Debate will close at that hour and voting will begin on amendments.

"If there were enough," said Senator Reed, "to stand with me and who were inclined, as I am inclined, to take till next December to act upon this measure, I would stand on this floor in opposition to it day and night until closure once more was applied in favor of foreign nations.

"I regard it as the worst piece of larceny ever attempted on the taxpayers of this country. No matter what excuse you offer, you are making a present to Italy at the expense of the taxpayers of between $1,500,000,000 and $2,000,000,000. I regard the proposition as indefensible, as monstrous, as infamous.

"I believe that when it has been submitted to the American people these will be other reports like the one we received from Illinois this morning."

VOLPI ANSWERS OUR PRESS.

He Ascribes Criticism to Ignorance of Italy's Condition.

MILAN, Italy, April 14 (AP).—The Popolo d'Italia today publishes an interview with Finance Minister Volpi, who was head of the Italian Debt Funding Commission to the United States, in which he spoke optimistically of the Italian financial situation.

Count Volpi asserted that attacks in some American newspapers, rather than being a campaign against the financial situation, were demonstrations of ignorance concerning Italy, similar to an ignorance shown concerning other European countries. Erroneous notions, Count Volpi said, also were due to unfounded news spread in bad faith by interested persons or Italian refugees.

He went on to say that the condition of the Italian budget was exactly as it appeared in monthly Treasury reports. He explained that the large public works which had been undertaken were indispensable, not only for the necessities of life, such as hospitals, schools and other public institutions in Southern Italy, but also were in order to supply means for greater industrial production, such as roads, railways and ports, leading to greater prosperity.

Discussing the fact that imports still exceed exports, Count Volpi was not altogether pessimistic, pointing out that the imports almost totally represented raw materials which Italy did not possess and was obliged to import in order to supply her industries. The most important problem for Italy to solve, Count Volpi said, was the improvement of her industrial production so as to be able to export in such quantities that the exports would exceed the import of raw material.

ADMIRES LONDON TRAFFIC.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 14.—"London is the most orderly city we have visited," said Frank J. Carr, Deputy Chief of Police of Buffalo, N. Y., who, with Frank H. Schwab, Mayor of that city, has been in London inspecting traffic arrangements. . . .

"In view of what London has to confront," said Carr, "the traffic flow here is simply marvelous. To look at Hyde Park corner, with its mass of tributary streets, and see all the traffic moving in an orderly way in the same direction without hitch or fuss is a fine spectacle.

"What respect London drivers pay to the arm of a policeman! Up it goes and everything in sight stops, and no back talk anywhere.

"But I cannot understand why London traffic policemen are not dressed in white; they must be hard to see in the dark."

SAYS FLORES KNEW SLAYER.

MAZATLAN, Sinaloa, April 14 (AP).—Traces of at least two kinds of poison have been found in the stomach of General Angel Flores, believed to have been the victim of political enemies. Rosales College physicians who conducted the examination have arranged for further analysis in Mexico City.

Sinaloa State officials are continuing the investigation on the theory that General Flores's political opponents so feared his powers as a statesman that they conspired to take his life.

The General's widow declares she knows who administered the poison, but she refuses of reveal the name. She also said Flores knew he was a poison victim and although he knew the name of his slayer he declined to divulge it.

EIGHTY MILES PER HOUR

CHRYSLER IMPERIAL "80"

PERFORMANCE SUPREME

To describe the new Chrysler Imperial "80" in terms of speed—and it is easily capable of eighty miles, and more per hour—would fail to do full justice to the sum total of its new luxury and finality of performance. Eighty miles an hour is the label of a new conception of virtually limitless power—power which moves the Imperial "80" with inconceivable smoothness and ease from a snail's pace to cannon ball speed. And always, at any gait, without strain, fatigue or discomfort. The Imperial "80" is a marked contrast in superiority to even the finest you may have known. And Chrysler quality gives the completest assurance of the year after year maintenance of its superiority.

OUTLOOK GLOOMY FOR ARMS MEETING

French Think Tchitcherin's League Letter Offers Excuse For Postponing Action.

POLAND FEARS TO DISARM

Luther Wants Russia in the League and Is Urging Her to Cooperate.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 14.—M. Tchitcherin's letter to the League of Nations is generally received in Paris—not officially, of course—as preparing adjournment of the disarmament plans either at the meeting at Geneva next month or before. That is to say, that even if the meeting is held, it will do little else than appoint a few committees to report at a later date.

However, this is no startling development, for it has been known in the European capitals for some little time what Moscow's answer would be to the League's invitation to attend its meeting at Geneva on May 17.

It is easy to see that M. Tchitcherin's note lacks sincerity. He is willing to attend the League meeting if held anywhere than Geneva, yet he finds the same meeting, since it will be held at Geneva, is futile and vain.

Russians Probably Will Be Blamed.

However, it being the case, as Mr. Houghton is reputed to have said in a manner judged over here to be diplomatically crude, that the political conditions in Europe now are not propitious to important disarmament progress, it will probably happen that the most logical thing to do will be to blame it on the Russians. It has got to be blamed on somebody. The Russians have nominated themselves and will probably be almost unanimously elected.

The Baltic States, Poland and Rumania have said they do not see their way clear to make a disarmament arrangement unless Russia is included in the bargain. The minute one tries to leave these countries out their neighbors become interested and, westward ho across Europe will sweep the decision not to disarm yet. Poland and France will decide to keep their armies, just as they will say England and America wish to keep their fleets.

Pertinax, in the Echo de Paris, says: "Well, anyhow, for once the Soviets have done us a service in delaying the ordeal which threatened us. A terrible battle has been avoided, a battle in which what remains of our national independence might have sunk, seeing that the weakness of our money leaves us open to so many attacks.

"And if M. Tchitcherin only knew it he has lost the best chance he ever had to wreck the treaties of peace. We were foolish enough to invite to the disarmament meeting those who hold themselves erect on the ruins of their country only by force and whose military expenditures swell from year to year. Their dignity keeps them home, and so much the better."

Suspects Soviet's Motives.

The Journal des Débats congratulates Ambassador Houghton on furnishing ammunition to Soviet diplomacy and says M. Tchitcherin's note showed that the only reason the Soviets ever considered attending the disarmament conference was the idea of troubling it in the hope of reaping benefits for bolshevism.

"The Soviet note will fool only naïve people, but unfortunately there are a lot of naïve people," it says. "Anyhow, what good is it to negotiate with Moscow about disarmament or anything else? What value can you attach to the Soviet signature when we know the Third International has raised bad faith to the pinnacle of principle in dealing with other countries?"

From the larger political point of view it is certain that M. Tchitcherin's note increases the desire of the League leaders to get Germany into the Geneva organization. The Russians have made it plain enough that they regard the League as an anti-Soviet organization and therefore Germany's being in the League would surely lessen the chances of a political and diplomatic partnership with Russia; and there can be no doubt the converse will be true, namely, that failure to bring about Germany's entry into the League next September will increase the chances of collaboration between Germany and Russia.

Luther Seeks to Persuade Soviet.

By LINCOLN EYRE.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, April 14.—That the backbone of the negotiations which have been under way for many months between Germany and Russia is the Luther Cabinet's desire to get Russia into the League of Nations, or at least to persuade her to cooperate in certain activities of the League, notably disarmament, was clearly indicated by Chancellor Luther to the German press tonight in connection with inquiries about the Russo-German negotiations cabled here from New York.

The Chancellor denied that a further treaty, or any amendments of either a political or military character to the Rapollo Treaty, was being considered. The basic argument of the negotiations between Moscow and Berlin was to prevent Germany's closer relations with the Western powers impairing the pleasant relations now existing, he intimated. The Chancellor stated that all the Western powers, especially those concerned in the Locarno compact had been fully informed of the negotiations with Russia, as a means of preventing Russo-German relations injuring the Reich's standing with the Western powers.

It is understood that Germany, on account of her geographical situation, is in the best position to act as a bridge between Geneva and Moscow. Germany cannot risk the slightest rupture with Russia in view of the present industrial situation, which export trade to Russia can materially strengthen and which has progressed to the point of an extension of trade credits to an amount of 300,000,000 marks. These negotiations, however, are now uncertain because of the State Department's recent veto of the Harriman proposals to take over a certain portion of these risks.

Though Germany is looking to Russia for commercial expansion, the Reich is also interested in seeing Russia disarm according to whatever agreements are reached by the League powers, and is confident the League disarmament conference will have significance only if the Soviet power participates.

On account of the new interpretation given to Article 16 of the League Covenant, Germany would be satisfied, because of her geographical position and her state of disarmament, if she could remain perfectly free to uphold neutrality with Russia.

Chancellor Luther also believes the time is not ripe for considering M. Tchitcherin's proposals for establishing an "Eastern Locarno" which would guarantee the borders of Russia and Baltic states and in which Germany would play an important role.

Poles Want Security Guarantee.

PRAGUE, April 14.—Premier Skrzynski, of Poland, believes in disarmament, but thinks it is not possible at the present time without some guarantee of security, because Poland, for example, fears Russia.

He made his views known in the course of an interview today.

He had been asked if disarmament were possible in Europe and whether Poland would disarm if America cancelled war debts, and the Premier unhesitatingly made the above reply. He then continued:

"A number of questions will also have to be considered before disarmament is possible in Europe. To mention only one—an international agreement is necessary as to the right of each country to manufacture arms and ammunition. However, I certainly would welcome some form of disarmament, as the nations of Europe have little left for costly armaments.

The Premier carefully avoided replying directly as to the possible effect cancellation of war debts would have upon the disarmament situation and rather emphasized the necessity of security above all other considerations, even monetary ones.

Cecil to Represent Britain.

LONDON, April 14 (AP).—Sir Austen Chamberlain, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, today announced in the House of Commons that Lord Robert Cecil, British delegate to the League of Nations, has been asked to act as the British representative on the preparatory committee of the coming Disarmament Conference. Lord Robert will be assisted by representatives of the Foreign Office, the War Office, the Admiralty and Air Ministry.

Spain Dismisses Moroccan Official.

MADRID, April 14 (AP).—An official statement issued today says a functionary attached to the Moroccan Office has been dismissed "for abuse of office." Neither the name of the functionary nor the nature of the offense committed was made public. It was said, however, that the incident was a delicate one and related to the Moroccan situation.

LEAGUE OPIUM REPORT EXPOSES SMUGGLINGS

Main Seizures Were Made at Singapore, the Contraband Coming From China.

GENOA, April 14.—The ingenuity of drug smugglers is shown in a communication, received by the League of Nations Opium Section today, describing seizures on information forwarded to the Cuban Government by a foreign legation—presumably the American.

When the German steamer Antiochia entered the port last May she was immediately visited by customs officials, who proceeded to break open a number of safes consigned to the Hamburg-American agent. At first no contraband was found, but the agents, acting on tips, proceeded with the destruction of the safes, inside which were found 389 packages of opium.

The captain and the consignee were innocent, it was learned, and through the same mysterious legation the Cuban authorities discovered shipments made by a Dutch smuggler, against whom the Netherlands has been asked to take penal measures.

Reports received from the chief of customs at Singapore state that opium seizures in the months of October, November and December totaled 8,839 taels in raw opium and 62,555 taels in prepared opium. With the exception of 95 taels worth all of it came from China.

It will be remembered during the Opium Conference that the American delegation insisted China had not made enough opium for domestic use and did not export any.

The principal seizure was made on the steamer Hong Peng from Amoy. In the sides of the ship was discovered opium as well as 22 packages of hydrochloride of analogue of cocaine.

In November the contraband was discovered in Chinese forged tubes, designed to show that the contents came from the Dutch Indies.

AMERICANS OPPOSE LEAGUE SHIPPING BODY

LONDON, April 14.—The creation of a maritime committee of the League of Nations, "to co-ordinate the public policy of the nations with regard to maritime commerce," met with no favor from the American delegates to the Third International Shipping Conference, which opened in London today.

Ira Campbell, counsel for the American Steamship Owners' Association, said that American ship owners did not like to see so many international organizations trying to run the shipping business. He hoped his fellow members, however, would appreciate the position of American shipping interests when the discussion arose on the function of the League of Nations. They do not intend to participate in it, he said, although silence did not necessarily mean acquiescence or opposition.

The conference expressed its disapproval of interference by the International Labor Office with the subject of the inspection of emigrants aboard ship, stating that it should confine itself to matters peculiar to labor.

Compulsory insurance of all ocean passengers is stated to be under consideration. Ira Campbell said that in America ship owners are suffering from a growing burden of liabilities for injuries and death, but that there are almost unsurmountable obstacles to be overcome under their law before the proposal could be carried through.

Floods at Bagdad Subsiding.

BAGDAD, Iraq, April 14 (AP).—Floods which have been threatening the destruction of this city because of the swollen condition of the Tigris River are subsiding and the danger is now believed to be over. Few new breaks in the embankments along the river have occurred and dykes that had been broken have been repaired. Strong winds, which tend to raise large waves in the flooded area, are continuing to cause some anxiety.

COOLIDGE APPROVES GERMAN CLAIMS BILL

Favors Adjustments Through Treasury Borrowings, Mellon Tells House Committee.

SECRETARY URGES PASSAGE

He Calls the Measure Fair to the Claimants and the German Nationals.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—President Coolidge approves the Treasury plan for the return to German nationals of property seized during the war and for an adjustment of American and German claims, based upon by the Mixed Claims Commission, through Treasury borrowing as proposed in the pending Mills bill, according to a statement to the Ways and Means Committee today by Secretary Mellon.

Secretary Mellon told of the President's endorsement of the Mills bill as a result of questions put by Representative Garner of Texas and other Democratic members of the committee.

The Secretary described the bill as one "recognizing the principle of the rights of property," and said that in his opinion it gave fair consideration of the rights of claimants on one side and the rights of the German nationals on the other. "The bill has the approval of the Administration, and I think it should be passed at this session," said Secretary Mellon.

A request made by Mr. Garner for the Treasury to supply information showing the profits and dividends of American companies that are seeking reimbursement under the Treaty of Berlin for ships lost before this country entered the war stirred a lively controversy in the committee.

Mr. Mellon was questioned by Representative Rayburn of Texas in respect to financial conditions in Germany. Mr. Rayburn quoted from a German official who said that the Berlin Government was practically free from internal debt and is now engaged in drafting a bill cutting taxes by 500,000,000 marks.

Secretary Mellon said he was not prepared to express an opinion on Germany's financial condition.

Mr. Mills said that under the Dawes plan it was not possible to take from Germany more than 2,500,000,000 marks a year, and that if more were taken the interests of other nations would be affected.

Mrs. Florence Kahn, Republican Representative from California, asked the committee to consider the principles involved in insurance mixed claims arising out of the San Francisco earthquake and fire in 1906.

The claims were settled by the German insurance companies on a compromise basis, she said, because the companies represented that their financial conditions were impaired. The insured persons now claim that there was fraud involved and ask the setting aside of the statute of limitations to permit consideration of these claims.

Prince Regent Receives MacVeaghs.

TOKIO, April 14 (AP).—Charles MacVeagh, American Ambassador, and Mrs. MacVeigh were this morning formally received by the Prince Regent and entertained at luncheon by the Empress. A number of prominent Japanese officials were present. This formal reception and luncheon were delayed owing to the postponed arrival of Mrs. MacVeagh.

HOUSE LEADERS AGREE TO TAKE UP FARM BILL

Will Permit Consideration of Any Relief Measure Reported Out by Committee.

WASHINGTON, April 14 (AP).—Although the Senate Agriculture Committee has approved a farm relief bill and the House Agriculture Committee still is struggling with the problem, legislation may reach the floor of the House first.

Republican leaders of the House have informed Chairman Haugen of the Agriculture Committee that they will permit almost immediate consideration of any measure reported. Even if the bill was unacceptable to the Administration, he was assured, there would be no effort to block a vote on it.

The committee, having closed hearings last night, will go into executive session tomorrow and the Chairman expects a bill to be reported before the end of the week. The Rules Committee has indicated that it will agree to a special rule calling up the bill within a few days and limiting debate to a few hours. Thus it is considered likely that relief legislation will be brought up for passage some time next week.

Chairman Norris of the Senate committee, will submit within ten days a report on the cooperative marketing bill, to which, as a rider, was attached the corn belt plan to stabilize prices by levying an equalization fee on basic agricultural commodities. The committee voted yesterday to report the amended measure, but there are no indications as to when it will be taken up by the Senate.

Secretary Jardine's communication of yesterday to the two committees suggesting creation of a board to aid farmers in marketing their products, and a revolving fund out of the Treasury, is thought by members to place the Administration definitely on record as opposed to the corn belt bill. The Secretary's letter did not mention the measure or its fee feature, although it provides for a commission such as he favors.

Representative Tincher, Republican, of Kansas, a member of the House committee, served notice today that he was "through" with the corn belt bill and would support the plan suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture.

ACTRESS GETS DIVORCE.

Hilda Ferguson Obtains Decree Against Baltimore Physician.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., April 14.—Hildegarde Gibbons Ugarte, known on the stage as Hilda Ferguson, was granted an absolute divorce today from her husband, Dr. Robert Belmont Ugarte, on the grounds of cruelty and awarded the custody of their 5-year-old child, Emily.

The Ugartes were married in 1919, the wedding being the culmination of a romance begun while both were attending school in Baltimore. He was a student at the University of Maryland Medical School and 25 years old. She was a high school pupil and 16 years. They eloped to Towson and returned to live with the girl's mother, Mrs. Demoree Stevenson.

WILL ALLOT $140,000 FOR BATTLEFIELDS

$75,000 FOR CELEBRATION

The State Will Also Appropriate $100,000 for Representation at Philadelphia Sesquicentennial.

ALBANY, April 14.—An agreement was reached at a conference between Governor Smith and the fiscal leaders of the Legislature today on the amount of money which the lawmakers will appropriate for the rehabilitation of the Saratoga, Bennington, Oriskany and Fort Stanwix battlefields and for the State's observance of the sesquicentennial celebration of the American Revolution.

The fiscal leaders agreed to appropriate a total of $140,000 for the battlefields. Of this amount $65,000 will be spent for the purchase of land at Saratoga and Oriskany and $75,000 for the rehabilitation of these two battlefields together with those of Bennington and Fort Stanwix.

A total of $315,000 will be appropriated for the battlefields, New York State's own sesquicentennial celebration and that at Philadelphia. Of this amount $250,000 will be taken from current revenues and $65,000 from the State park bond issue money. In order to appropriate such a large amount for these projects the Governor told the conferees that the bill which was passed yesterday appropriating $3,500,000 for the payment of slaughtered tubercular cattle would have to be recalled and reduced considerably. Soon after the conference a resolution was adopted in both houses recalling the tubercular cattle measure. It is understood that $500,000 will be slashed from it before it is passed again and returned to the Governor.

Allocation of Fund.

The fund which the fiscal leaders agreed to appropriate will be allocated as follows:

Sixty-five thousand dollars for purchase of battlefield lands.

Seventy-five thousand dollars for rehabilitation of battlefields.

Seventy-five thousand dollars for the sesquicentennial program to be arranged under the direction of the State Board of Regents.

The purchase of the battlefield lands will be brought about through a bill sponsored by Assemblyman Esmond, Republican, of Saratoga, which authorizes the use of $65,000 of the money from the park bond issue. Under this measure as it was originally drafted $285,000 would have been appropriated outright for the purchase of lands and the improvement of the battlefields. Later the bill was amended to appropriate $150,000, and under today's agreement the latter amount was reduced another $10,000.

Advocates of rehabilitation were happy, however, at the agreement reached by the fiscal leaders and the Governor. They believe they will have sufficient funds if the money is properly apportioned.

Oppose Allowance for Philadelphia.

The conference followed a hearing in the executive chamber, when advocates of rehabilitation made their plea for financial assistance directly to the Governor. There was considerable opposition to the proposal to appropriate $100,000 for participation in the Philadelphia celebration. Protest was made by William Pierrepont White of Utica, who maintained needs of this State should have preference.

"We ought to go down to Philadelphia and tell them that the Liberty Bell wouldn't have rung if it hadn't been for these battles within the boundaries of New York State," said Mr. White.

"We can't ignore that celebration when all the other States are going to take part," said Senator Hewitt, Chairman of the Finance Committee of the upper house.

Governor Smith agreed with Senator Hewitt that the State should take part in the celebration at Philadelphia, pointing to the fact that it had agreed to erect two buildings at the exposition.

The movement started last year by Assemblyman Esmond for rehabilitation of the old battlefields was later taken up by civic and historical associations throughout the Mohawk Valley.

"It has been a long, hard fight, but every one who has taken part is pleased as the result of today's agreement on the part of the fiscal leaders and Governor Smith to see that sufficient funds are appropriated to restore the battlefields," said Assemblyman Esmond. "Every one who has helped in any way deserves the thanks of all the people of the State."

FREED HEADS RADIO SHOWS.

Succeeds E. B. Mallory as President of Exhibition Corporation.

The Radio Exhibition Corporation, organized to conduct radio shows throughout the country, has elected J. D. R. Freed, President of the Freed-Eisemann Radio Corporation, as President to succeed E. B. Mallory of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, recently resigned as President of the ibition corporation.

The organization consists of twenty-nine manufacturers who own stock in the corporation. A private meeting of the directors is planned at the Lotus Club next Tuesday at 7 P. M., and on Thursday evening, April 22, a dinner will be held at the Hotel Roosevelt, where a public announcement will be made of the association's plans.

Eric Palmer, for the exhibition corporation, said yesterday that the main object of the organization was to put radio shows on an economical basis.

"There will be two radio shows in New York during the week of Sept. 10," said Mr. Palmer, "but in 1927 we expect that there will be only one big show with all coope- under one roof."

WANT UNIFORM RATE FOR MUSIC BY RADIO

Broadcasters Say Holders of Copyrights Raise Their Fees as High as 500 Per Cent.

DENY TRYING TO FIX PRICES

Klugh Says National Association Is Willing to Let Congress or Composers Decide.

Paul B. Klugh, Executive Chairman of the National Association of Broadcasters, replied yesterday to a newspaper statement of E. C. Mills, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, regarding the Dill-Vestal bills to fix terms under which broadcasters could use copyrighted musical compositions. Mr. Klugh said that Mr. Mills had "twisted the facts."

"Mr. Mills," he continued, "charges us with having gone before Congress to request legislation that would enable us to fix prices at which to seize the copyright owner's property. This is untrue. We are on record repeatedly as in favor of giving the copyright owner sole control of his compositions. We are perfectly willing to let Congress, the American Society or any constituted authority fix the rates, and to let the copyright owner decide whether or not his songs shall be broadcast.

"What we do desire is permanence and stability. As matters stand, there is no uniformity of charges made by the American Society to broadcasting stations of the same power. From year to year they increase their license demands as much as 500 per cent., and frequently they withdraw musical numbers at the precise moment when the public wants to hear them most.

"It would not be so serious if the American Society did not control 90 per cent. of the music in which the public is interested.

"Mr. Mills says that the American Telephone and Telegraph Company leases WEAF to individual users at the rate of $2,700 an hour, or 1,000 times the price of an hour's rendition of copyrighted songs. This is a misrepresentation. The $2,700 an hour is the figure for using WEAF and fourteen leading stations in conjunction, each of which would be paying a separate license fee."

Mr. Klugh asked a modification of the law concerning "mechanical reproducers" to include broadcasting stations. In this manner, he said, the rates for broadcasting songs would be as stable as phonograph rates.

EULOGIZES WILSON AT JEFFERSON DINNER

Thomas Jefferson and Woodrow Wilson were called "the greatest American statesmen," and the Republican Party was denounced for "everlastingly playing politics while it forgets humanity," by Supreme Court Justice William H. Black at a Thomas Jefferson dinner of the Women's National Democratic Club, last night, at the Majestic Hotel.

"Woodrow Wilson was crucified on the pusillanimity of the American people, whose minds were too narrow to embrace his world vision," he said.

"As soon as we shake off the Republican Party, the influence of the trusts, and end the jockeying for political place regardless of the welfare of human kind; as soon as American people obtain a chance to express their opinion; we shall realize the ideals for which Wilson was driven to the grave. We shall join the World Court and the League of Nations.

"To those who continually cry about 'entangling alliances' I would say that entangling alliances are one thing, and cooperation with out fellow-man to end war, another."

Not all those who attended agreed with Justice Black. State Senator William Lathrop Love, opposing the League of Nations, said: "In my opinion, the breakdown of the Geneva parley was the laboratory test. We should be careful that the ship of State does not stray from its moorings. I am unequivocally against the World Court and the League of Nations."

Mrs. Otto Kahn, Mrs. William Albert Lewis, Miss Ella Sullivan and Mrs. Anna W. Hochfelder were among those present. Mrs. Lillian R. Sire, President of the club, presided.

TED COY EXONERATED OF DISORDERLY CHARGE

Court Upholds Ex-Football Star for Hitting Stranger in Taxi in the Early Morning.

Edward H. (Ted) Coy, former all-American football star of Yale, was arraigned yesterday in West Side Court on charges of disorderly conduct. He was honorably discharged by Magistrate George W. Simpson after he had taken the stand and rebutted the arresting officer's testimony under instruction from his lawyer, Morgan J. O'Brien Jr. of 120 Broadway.

Mr. Coy was arrested at 5 o'clock yesterday morning at Eighty-seventh Street and Columbus Avenue by Patrolman Nicholas Scollard who testified that he had refused to move on after an altercation in which Coy had struck his companion and a taxi driver.

Mr. Coy, who was suffering from laryngitis and could hardly speak in a whisper on the stand, denied the charges. He told the Court he was standing near the taxicab when some one he didn't know invited him to get into the cab. Fearing that back of the invitation lay some ulterior motive, Mr. Coy said, he struck the man. He denied he was intoxicated, and said he could not have made much noise at the time, as he is suffering from laryngitis.

In discharging him, Magistrate Simpson said he did not blame him for striking the man if he had any reason to doubt his intentions.

Mr. Coy's first wife, Sophie d'Antignac Meldrim, obtained a divorce on grounds of desertion in 1924. Last year he married Jeanne Eagels, the actress.

KILLS BILL TO FORCE AUTO INSURANCE

CALLED BLOW AT BUSINESS

Senator's Measure for Tripartite Legislative Sessions Fails—He Tilts With Nicoll.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 14.—Senator Nathan Straus Jr. of Manhattan made a valiant fight on the floor of the Senate today for consideration of his bill providing for a system of "motor vehicle compensation." The bill is held by the Committee on Rules, and the battle came on a motion made by the Senater to bring it out on the floor for final disposition.

Only 10 votes could be mustered for the motion, which required 26 to prevail. Senator Knight opposed the bill vigorously, on the ground that it would tend to put the State into what he termed private business. The vote did not follow party lines.

The Straus bill, which has won widespread approval outside of legislative circles, contemplates substitution for the personal injury suit of a compensation fund which would be created by compulsory contributions by owners of motor cars. A premium paid to this fund would be a condition for obtaining a license to operate. In effect, a system of mutual insurance under State control would be created, akin to the existing compensation insurance, although the compensation law leaves employers free to go elsewhere than the State fund for their insurance. Compensation for injuries or deaths caused by motor vehicle accidents would be paid out of the fund so created.

Would Create $30,000,000 Fund.

Senator Straus said that the cost to the owners of motor vehicles would be comparatively slight, approximately $20 a car. This, he said, would provide for a compensation fund of $30,000,000.

"Automobiles caused more than 20,000 deaths and injury to more than half a million people in the United States during the year 1925," he said, in debating on his motion. "The Motor Vehicle Commissioner of New York State reports that 2,120 persons were killed and 54,398 were injured in 1925 in this State. We have become so callous that we do not reflect, very often, on the pain and poverty caused by these injuries. Automobile accidents are accidents only so far as the individual is concerned. They may be considered as permanent incidents of pedestrian and motor travel.

"Over 70 per cent. of the automobiles on the road today carry no liability insurance. As a rule the improvident are also the insolvent. Frequently they own nothing but a mortgaged car. A suit for personal injury against such an owner becomes a ghastly farce. Liability insurance does not especially benefit victims of automobile accidents. It benefits insurance companies and attorneys specializing in personal injury litigation. Less than one-third of the money paid in the form of premiums to the private, profit-taking insurance companies is actually paid out by them to the victims of accidents. The rest is absorbed by expenses and profits."

Another advantage, he contended, of the legislation he advocated would be the control it would give to the State over reckless drivers who, in the first and second instances, would find their premiums increased and in the third instance would be barred from participation in the State's compensation system, with the result that they would be deterred from operating a motor car.

Knight Defends Private Business.

"This bill," Senator Knight said, "would involved compulsory insurance and the setting up by the State of an exclusive insurance association of which all automobile owners would be forced to become members. It is another step in the series we have witnessed to put the State into private business. It is the type of bill designed to set the State up in business in competition with private initiative in business. I believe the sober-minded citizens of this State are determined to keep the State out of private business, and that our position here in refusing to carry out the intent of this measure will be widely indorsed."

Senator Nicoll of New York said one of the most objectionable features of the Straus bill was that it would deny automobile owners the right to procure insurance where they wished.

"This country owes what it possesses of greatness largely to recognition of the principle that private initiative and enterprise deserve recognition, but if Senator Straus has his way there will be little left to the individual except permanently to retire and let the State take over everything. I have had occasion to look over some of his legislation, and it is of a piece with this measure, which he mildly states is revolutionary. But if he aspires to become a revolutionary leader, let me say to him that this State is not the place for starting his revolution."

Immediately on the defeat of his motion Senator Straus offered a concurrent resolution calling for a legislative investigation of the subject involved. He asked immediate consideration of this, but Senator Knight objected, and it was sent to the Committee on Finance, where it probably will remain.

The daily exchange of repartee between Senators Straus and Nicoll, which started while the insurance bill was up, continued in the debate on a subsequent motion made by Senator Straus with a view to bringing out from committee his constitutional amendment providing for tri-partite sessions of the Legislature, with the first month devoted to the introduction of bills, the second to their consideration by standing committees, and the third to final action on all measures reported.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 14.—"The Education of Uncle Shylock" is the title of an article in The Daily Mail by L. J. Maxse, editor of The National Review, whose vitriolic diatribes against the United States have been a feature of his recent writings.

He finds further material in articles by Frank H. Simonds wherein the latter seeks to convince his countrymen that the European attitude toward the United States has undergone a revolutionary change.

Maxse writes:

"Recent American visitors to Europe are believed to have taken home increasingly depressing accounts of the sentiments entertained in this hemisphere toward their own country. Some of them are puzzled, many are indignant, a small minority comprehend—but all are agreed that something like a revolution has occurred in the attitude of the Old World toward the New.

"It is abundantly acknowledged by these observers that such oratory as distinguishes the dinners of the Pilgrims' Society, the luncheons of the English-Speaking Union or the functions under the auspices of the Sulgrave Institute no longer represent any appreciable proportion of public opinion on this side of the Atlantic, and the régime of 'blood is thicker than water' has been replaced by something less sentimental."

After applauding Simonds for his "moral courage" and pointing out that "Americans can say things to one another that might seem invidious on the lips or from the pens of foreigners." Maxse concludes:

"We shall be interested to observe the success of this remarkable writer in the task of educating Uncle Shylock, which hitherto has been somewhat neglected."

PERET GOING TO LONDON.

French Finance Minister Will Sound Out British on Debt.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 14.—Premier Briand, after a conference with the British Ambassador, Lord Crewe, announced that Finance Minister Raoul Peret would go to London in a few days.

It is officially announced, however, that the trip should be interpreted only as a first move toward the resumption of debt negotiations, and that nothing definite will be settled at present.

The French desire to obtain a Washington settlement first is clearly pointed to by this decision.

The Senate, in the course of the budget discussion yesterday at the Government's request nominally reduced various appropriations payable in other than French currency—such as League of Nations dues, special allowances for diplomats in foreign countries, &c. As only the Chamber can initiate appropriations, this roundabout course is necessary, as the fall of the franc since the budget has been out of the Chamber's hands has left a number of such items without sufficient funds.

HAD PISTOL IN HOTEL, SEIZED

Prisoner Aroused Bellboy's Suspicions by Light Baggage.

John Wagner, 33 years old, who said he had a wife and two children living at 867 Second Avenue, was locked up in the West Thirteenth Street Station last night on a charge of violating the Sullivan law. Detectives Stapleton, Clancy and McNamara arrested the man shortly before midnight in front of the Hotel Pennsylvania, and when they examined a bag which he had left in the hotel a few minutes before, they said, they found a loaded 32-calibre pistol in it.

A short time before his arrest, Wagner had asked the clerk in the hotel for a room for himself and his wife, although he was alone. A bellboy became suspicious when he picked up the bag and found it empty, except for something which rolled around inside, and later proved to be the pistol. The would-be guest had no money, but he produced a check and then announced he would return in a short time with his wife.

The three detectives were standing near the clerk's desk, and they followed Wagner to the strst and questioned him. He was evasive, and then they took him back to the hotel and found the pistol. When they searched him at the station, they said, they found a letter in a pocket addressed "to whom it may concern," and expressing the hope that his friends would not feel offended at what he was about to do "because I am at the end of my rope and am disgusted with life." Wagner's explanation of the letter was withheld by the police.

The Fussy Foursome

Colonel Bill Watkins comes first. Last time it started to rain, the rest of the gang scurried for shelter, protesting that this is legally a dry country, but the Colonel kept right on playing. You see, his was one of our new $55 golf suits—and consequently showerproof.

Henry Simpson holds the course record for broken clubs. A topped shot always meets with the same shattering reproof—and even a steel-shafted driver learnt too late that it had met its master.

Because his monthly bill for clubs is so high he has to economize. So each year he buys one of our 4-piece golf suits—it gives him double wear because it's equally handsome for town or links.

Though Frank Wainright's average score is an ample 120, he's often pointed out as a typical Class A man. We take all the credit for that—he wears a Townlink golf suit and it makes him look so much like a good golfer that people think he really is one.

Young Tom Eliot is a nut for comfort. Once he was nearly black-balled for playing in a bathing suit. Now his first Townlink golf suit has taught him that he can dress like a sophisticated New Yorker and still be perfectly comfortable.

All the members of the Fussy Foursome get their clothes at Weber and Heilbroner. Most golfers do. Our knowledge of the game and its needs is so thorough that each year thousands of golfers come to us for their clothing wants—and we never fail to satisfy them.

This season we've developed the finest assortment of golf apparel in our history. New ideas in golf suits, stockings, sweaters, caps, shirts, ties, underwear, garters—everything a golfer wears.

When the Colonel saw his partner's new stockings and heard that they cost only $1.65, he was so surprised that he missed the ball completely. When you see these stockings, you too will find it hard to believe that they cost so little. All-wool, imported from England, handsomely patterned in fashionable Spring colorings. Other Golf Hose up to $10.

For years Judge Dixon was a one round golfer. His morning round used to tire him so much that he'd spend the rest of the day resting his feet. Now he wears Nettleton golf shoes and wouldn't think of playing less than 36 holes a day. Nettletons are the most comfortable, as well as the smartest golf shoes we know of. Sturdy calfskin, tan trimmed, $14 and $15. Miller-Cook Golf Shoes, $8.50 and $10.

Ever since Howard Baxter came back from Paris, his neckties have drawn bigger galleries than a championship match. He is explaining that the tie he is wearing does not come from France, although it looks as if it did. Its name is Charté—it is a new cloth found only at our stores—and it is patterned in a highly original polka dot arrangement. $1.50 Other Spring Neckwear, $1 to $4.

The gentleman on the right is in the sweater business. He has just seen our new $8.50 pullovers and is telling his friend that sweaters of that quality and smartness can't possibly be sold for $8.50. He's right—ordinarily they couldn't be—but we made an unusually fortunate purchase. Neat Jacquards in golfing browns, greens, heathers, mixtures. Other Sweaters up to $16.50.

Showerproofed (a new and unusual feature), and smartly styled. Other 4-piece golf suits, $50 to $85.

VOTE FRAUD CHARGE STIRS JERSEY CITY

PROSECUTOR TO ACT TODAY

Admits He Received Affidavits in January and Started Inquiry—Doubts Frauds Were Great.

Charges of election fraud that throw doubt on the plurality by which A. Harry Moore, Democratic candidate for Governor of New Jersey, was elected were made public yesterday by Thomas McDonald, Superintendent of the Hudson County Bureau of Elections, a Republican. Governor Moore's plurality in the entire State was 36,000. In Hudson County alone it was 103,000.

Although Mr. McDonald had placed evidence, including ten affidavits to election irregularities, in the hands of County Prosecutor John Milton as early as Jan. 29, no action was taken by Mr. Milton till yesterday. Rumors of fraud had directed criticism on Mr. McDonald. It was to refute charges of inactivity, Mr. McDonald said, that he finally decided to make the evidence public.

Mr. Milton responded by saying that he would submit it to the Grand Jury tomorrow.

"It is true that Mr. McDonald informed me of these allegations last January," Mr. Milton said. "The reason I made no mention of them was that the Grand Jury at that time was investigating similar charges in Union City and West New York, and I did not want to confuse the issues.

Says Inquiry is Underway.

"I at once assigned an investigator from this office, however, and a further reason for delaying any action was that he has not yet completed his investigation. I think Mr. McDonald is exaggerating the magnitude of the frauds, but I will refrain from commenting as to whether or not the man knows his business."

Mr. McDonald charged that votes had been cast by persons who gave residence addresses which turned out to be vacant lots, that a vote had been cast in the name of a man who was dead. He listed eighty-five ballot numbers and names for which, he alleged, two votes had been cast. These were confined to the First, Second, Sixth, Tenth and Eleventh Jersey City Wards.

He also asserted that in the Second Ward there was found, in a closet connected with the polling place, a mutilated official ballot "that bears evidence of having been marked for the Republican candidates. In this district, according to official returns, the Republican candidate for Governor (Senator Whitney) received not a single vote."

Mr. McDonald cited instances where, he declared, the official number of votes cast exceeded the number of registered voters. In a district where there were 662 names on poll books, 683 votes had been cast. The excess of votes over names in the districts where two votes had been cast on one name ranged from 30 to 100.

Mr. McDonald also charged that there were registration frauds.

Storm Brewing for Days.

The rumpus over election frauds had been threatening to flare up since March 29, when Mrs. Helene O'Connor, Republican leader in the First Ward, told the Hudson County Regular Republican Women's Club that in one district a woman had been permitted to cast forty votes. Her accusation, coupled with criticism of Mr. McDonald for not starting an investigation, was taken up by others, finally inducing Mr. McDonald to disclose the investigation which had been begun.

Both he and Mr. Milton said there was no evidence to support Mrs. O'Connor's allegation; and when the question was put directly to her she admitted that it was "a rumor I believed to be true. Whether it is true or not, there is plenty to investigate."

While Mr. McDonald's charges were causing a furore yesterday afternoon among both Republicans and Democrats, Frank Hague, guiding spirit of the Jersey City Democracy, and recently elected Mayor, was with Governor Moore at the opening ball game at West Side Park.

TELLS OF BIG LOSSES BY LEITER ESTATE

Accountant Testifies $5,831,200 Was Spent on One Mine to Yield $3,141,856.

CHICAGO, April 14 (AP).—The books of the Levi Z. Leiter estate coal properties at Zeigler, Ill., were "very involved" but showed substantial operating losses, Herbert Beck, public accountant, testified at today's hearing of the suit of other heirs to remove as trustees Joseph Leiter, a son, and William J. Warr.

In the twenty years' operation of mine 7 alone, Beck said, the expenditures were $5,831,200 and the income was $3,141,856. He further testified that within a year of his father's death, Joseph Leiter spent more than half a million of the $30,000,000 estate on the Zeigler properties.

An indebtedness of $200,630 of the Zeigler Coal Company to the estate was closed by transferring it to the "mortgage indebtedness trust fund," Mr. Beck said the books showed. His examination of the accounts was for the period of 1904 to 1924.

Warr, whose removal is sought by the Countess of Suffolk, Lady Cynthia Mosley and others who charge he was the "dray horse" trustee in the mismanagement of Lady Suffolk's brother, Joseph, did not appear in court as scheduled today. His testimony was interrupted ten days ago when he became ill. The court appointed a physician to visit Warr and report on his condition.

TWO HEALTH OFFICERS WILL BE TRIED TODAY

The Board of Health will place on trial today two employes who were suspended in connection with the charges of graft brought by Health Commissioner Harris. Six employes have been accused. Two others of these will be placed on trial on Friday.

Harry A. Danziger of Middle Village, Queens, who was indicted Tuesday by the Bronx Grand Jury on a charge of extortion from milk dealers and who is free under $10,000 bail, will answer today to the indictment.

Little progress in the investigation of conditions in the milk business was reported yesterday. It was announced that the independent milk dealers of the city had organized a body similar to a chamber of commerce to aid in the reform. They believe the revelations attendant upon Danziger's arrest which showed that bootleg milk was being shipped into the city and distributed broadcast, have hurt their business, it was said.

Practically all the independent dealers in Manhattan, Brooklyn, Queens and the Bronx have pledged themselves through the organization, Dr. Harris said, to conform to the regulations of the Health Department.

Relative to charges that barber shops and beauty parlors had been canvassed for tribute in a previous administration of the Health Department, Dr. Harris said yesterday that an aluminum handle for a vibrator, such as is used in barber shops, had been placed in his possession. The handle is stamped, "Approved by the Board of Health." It was sold for $10, he said, and appeared to be in the five-and-ten-cent class.

"The Department of Health, by tradition and custom," said Dr. Harris, "has never approved any commercial article."

Attorney General Resents Senator Walsh's Method of Asking for Information.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Attorney General Sargent refused today to tell the Senate Judiciary subcommittee whether the Department of Justice would or would not prosecute George B. Hayes, a lawyer, of 42 Broadway, New York, for alleged perjury because of testimony he gave against Senator Burton K. Wheeler in the trial at Great Falls, Mont., a year ago.

The subcommittee was considering a resolution introduced by Senator Walsh, Democrat of Montana, which seeks to learn what the department intends to do. Hayes testified that Senator Wheeler offered to divide with him fees for practicing before the Department of the Interior.

Senator Walsh asked the Attorney General to appear before the subcommittee after he had failed to obtain any information from Assistant Attorney General Donovan. He was interested in reported affidavits of two men, that they had seen Senator Wheeler and Hayes talking at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel at the time, when, according to Hayes, Senator Wheeler offered to divide the fees.

Sargent Admits He Saw Data.

Senator Walsh told the Attorney General that he had been unable to obtain any information from Mr. Donovan as to the "affidavits," and asked if Mr. Sargent had seen them. Mr. Sargent called to Senator Walsh's attention that Mr. Donovan had not mentioned "affidavits" but "data." He said he had seen the data.

Senator Walsh referred to his resolution as a "request to the Attorney General for information," and the Attorney General pointed out that the resolution "directed" the Attorney General to inform the Senate as to his plans.

"Do you think that is the proper way to request information?" asked Mr. Sargent.

"The best I know," said Senator Walsh.

Senator Walsh spoke of papers in Department of Justice files relating to the Hayes-Wheeler meeting.

He asked Mr. Sargent if he would tell the subcommittee what was in the papers. Mr. Sargent replied:

"I do not think it is compatible to the public interest to reveal them. Who is charged with the direct responsibility for such prosecutions, the executive or the legislative branch of the Government?"

"Primarily the Department of Justice," said Senator Walsh. "But the Senate insists that it determine what is compatible to the public interest, and it has never been willing to admit that when it asks for information the head of an executive department has the right to decide whether or not he will give it."

Declares Hayes Was Unreliable.

Senator Walsh questioned representatives of the Treasury Department as to complaints asking for the disbarment of Attorney Hayes from practicing before that department just before the time when he was called as a witness in the Wheeler trial. He sought this information, he said, to show that Hayes was a man "entirely unreliable in character at the time he was called as a witness."

S. R. Jacobs, a Deputy Commissioner detailed to the Enrollment and Disbarment Committee of the Treasury, and Lawrence Becker, attorney for that committee, explained that Hayes had failed to make any income tax returns for the years 1917, 1918, 1919 and 1920. They said that examination of his books by the Treasury Intelligence Unit showed that he had earned in those years respectively $13,293.50, $18,699.88, $35,319.56 and $289,606.21. The amount now due from him is unpaid taxes and in penalties for not filing returns and other violations totals $292,191.33, they told the committee.

KNIFE BLADE IN FACE UNDETECTED A MONTH

Harlem Negro Knew Something Was Wrong, However, Since Argument With Friends.

For nearly a month John Tyler Hines, a negro of 142 West 129th Street, walked the streets of Harlem and went about his regular business with a "pain in the jaw."

Early this week it developed that the pain was the result of a six-inch knife blade being firmly embedded in his face under the left cheek. On Sunday night Dr. Walter I. Delph of the Edgecombe Sanitarium at 328 West 137th Street extracted the knife blade.

On the night of March 15 Hines had a little argument, as he called it, with some of his friends. One of the friends left the knife blade in his cheek as the argument progressed, but Hines did not know it. He thought he had merely been scratched.

The cut was treated by an ambulance surgeon, but a few days later Hines's jaw felt sore, so he went to Dr. Delph. There was no indication of a serious wound, and Dr. Delph at first believed the man to be suffering from a partial paralysis of the jaw, and treated him accordingly. He applied electrical treatment and with the knife action as a conductor of the electrical current, Hines's face ached very badly.

To Free Boy In Sister's Death.

County Prosecutor John O. Bigelow of Essex County, N. J., announced yesterday that no charges would be preferred against Joseph Cocuzza, 12 years old, of 176 Newton Street, Newark, who shot and fatally wounded his four-year-old sister Kate, while they were playing with a revolver. Joseph is being kept at the Parental Home in ignorance of his sister's death and will be returned to his home so soon as the excitement dies down. Mr. Bigelow said he was convinced the shooting was accidental.

EARLY RADIO CHAOS DUE TO PATENT WAR

Witness in the $2,000,000,000 "Trust" Inquiry Says Infringements Were Constant.

NOW BROADCASTING GREW

S. M. Kintner Asserts Demand From Amateurs Led to Building of Big Stations.

Constant patent infringements in the radio manufacturing field prior to 1921 reduced the industry to a chaotic state, according to Samuel M. Kintner, manager of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company's research department, principal witness yesterday at the Federal Trade Commission's investigation of the alleged $2,000,000,000 radio trust. The hearing was before Examiner William C. Reeves, in the commission's offices at 45 Broadway.

Mr. Kintner, who was on the stand for the third day, said it was common knowledge when the Westinghouse Company bought the International Radio Telegraph Company patents for $2,500,000 in 1920 that the General Electric Company was seeking leadership in the radio industry.

In describing the legal difficulties resulting from patent infringement, the witness said the situation was so bad that the Westinghouse Company paid an additional $870,000 for certain patent licenses considered essential to the future of its radio business.

Describing how the present broadcasting system developed, Mr. Kintner said that Professor Frank Conrad, assistant chief engineer of the Westinghouse Company, started about six years ago to send out scraps of news and musical reproductions from phonograph records over a home-built broadcasting apparatus. Amateurs caught the programs, and so insistent was the demand for this service that Professor Conrad provided a regular semi-weekly program and Pittsburgh department stores began to sell small crystal sets.

The demand for programs became so insistent that the Westinghouse Company finally built its East Pittsburgh broadcasting station, the first achievement of which was the broadcasting of the 1920 Presidential election returns.

Mr. Kintner said the Westinghouse Company now sells more than 4,000,000 vacuum tubes a year and controls 4,000 patents, many of them relating to the radio field. The radio patents, he said, were protected in many foreign countries.

The hearing will be resumed at 10 o'clock this morning.

ARTIST HAS WOMAN HELD.

Xesus Corredoyra, an artist, of 54 West Eighty-seventh Street, caused the arraignment in the West Side Court on the charge of grand larceny yesterday of a woman who said she was the Baroness di Soledad Marguerite Alcahali, 26 years old, of the Hotel Alamac.

Corredoyra said he gave the woman twenty-eight of his paintings, valued at $80,000, to copy and sell for him. He said he had been unable to get the paintings back and that the woman's explanations were unsatisfactory.

The woman pleaded not guilty. She was released in $3,000 bail, furnished by a surety company, for examination April 17.

If the Reichstag should fail to adopt the bill, the decision must be submitted to a national plebiscite.

SUGAR CUT IN CUBA ACCEPTED BY CABINET

Crop to Be Reduced 10 Per Cent. —News Sends Some Stocks Here to New Lows for Year.

HAVANA, April 14 (AP).—The Cuban Cabinet today accepted the plan presented by sugar growing interests to reduce the crop by 10 per cent.

The Cabinet decided to prevent the overproduction of sugar for the next two years as well as curtailing the present crop.

Congress is to be asked to pass legislation providing for enforcement of these two decisions, and the President will probably issue decrees to prevent further clearing of land for the planting of additional sugar cane for the next two years.

The offer by the cane growers to limit the crop was voluntary. Enforcement is to be left largely in the hands of the growers' association.

The Secretary of Agriculture informed the Cabinet that reports up to April 1 indicated that the crop would fall well below the large estimates made by experts at the commencement of the present harvesting season, even though there was no plan to curtail the crop.

Sugar stocks forecast the tightening of the reins on producers in Cuba yesterday by a plunge which carried them 1 to 22 points lower than at the previous close. Up to this time the sugar shares had been fairly firm and did not falter during the run on the Cuban banks. Private advices received early in the day from Cuba, however, were to the effect that stringent regulations were in course of preparation, and the heavy selling of these issues followed.

The raw sugar market remained moderately firm on these reports, which were later confirmed by cables stating that by official decree the sugar crop will be reduced 10 per cent. of the estimates made in December. The crop was estimated at that time by leading statisticians as between 5,200,000 and 5,300,000 long tons. Just how this reduction will be brought about was not made clear in private advices received in Wall Street yesterday.

The weakness in the stock market, concentrated on the sugar shares in the morning, spread to the motor and steel issues just before the close, and prices declined swiftly. The record of sales of sugar shares on the New York Stock Exchange and Curb market yesterday was as follows:

Sales.	Stocks.	High.	Low.	Last.

MAN WHO SLEW WIFE ENDS HIS OWN LIFE

Hingste Commits Suicide in a Hoboken Cafe With Pistol He Used in Murder.

Using the same pistol with which he killed his wife, Jennie, early Tuesday in their home, at 743 Twenty-sixth Street, North Bergen, Ernest Hingste committed suicide yesterday morning by shooting himself in the head in a restaurant at 711 Jefferson Street, Hoboken.

Hingste killed his wife, according to the police, because of jealousy over her friendship for two men, one of them a Hoboken policeman. After shooting her through the head while their two young children slept in an adjoining room, Hingste fled, leaving a note to his brother, the last line of which was, "Let the town where I am found pay for my funeral."

Hingste, it was believed, spent all of Tuesday searching for the Hoboken policeman, with the intention of killing him before ending his own life. He looked haggard when he walked into the Jefferson Street restaurant yesterday morning and greeted John Valentino, the proprietor, whom he knew.

Sitting at a table, Hingste read carefully the account of the shooting of his wife in a local newspaper and marked several parts of the story with a pencil. Then, as Valentino started for a telephone to call the police, Hingste quietly walked to a rear room and shot himself.

NORMAN THOMAS JAILED IN GARFIELD

because the police of Garfield were unable to keep order.

Councilman Joseph Quinlever declared that the entrance of Sheriff Nimmo was "a crime," and said his deputies were chosen and armed with shotguns "without regard to their character or reputation." He said the effect of having deputy sheriffs in this city on the occasion of the last strike was "anything but creditable."

Councilmen George Morrow, Edward Kunkle and Joseph Kolbuck declared that deputy sheriffs were unwelcome in Garfield and asked the Mayor to grant the petition of the citizens that they be withdrawn. The Councilmen protested against the presence of Sheriff Nimmo and said they had not been consulted before he was asked to take charge of the situation.

The citizens booed City Judge Richard Baker's suggestion that Robert O'Brien of the National Security League be allowed to speak. Speakers attacked O'Brien as a "strikebreaker." O'Brien did not get the floor. Mayor Burke said he would take the petition under advisement.

Six deputy sheriffs with sawed off shotguns on their shoulders patrolled the vicinity of Outwater Lane and Midland Avenue this afternoon when Mr. Thomas appeared to test the Riot act. He was accompanied by Rev. Dr. Webber, the Rev. Edward Chaffee, of the Labor Temple, New York; Freda Kirchwey, managing editor of The Nation; Dr. E. C. Lindeman of the New School For Social Research; Forest Bailey of the Civil Liberties Union, McAllister Coleman; Arthur Baker Lewis of the Rand School, Clarina Michelson, Lillian Symes and Mary Heaton Vorse.

A crowd of 150 strikers gathered as Thomas stepped on a tree stump and began to speak of the necessity for free speech. He urged the strikers not to commit disorderly acts and said that the bail of $30,000 fixed for Albert Weisbord, their leader, was unjust and excessive. It was while he was denouncing excessive bail as "a mockery of justice" that Under-sheriff Donaldson blew a whistle. Special deputies closed in on Thomas, ordered him off the stump and a Garfield policeman, Arthur McParlin, placed him under arrest. The crowd was dispersed and left the scene quietly. Thomas was hustled into an automobile and driven to Justice Hargreaves's office and then to the County Jail.

A committee with six children of the strikers left tonight for Washington, where they will picket the White House and carry signs. The signs will read, "Mr. President, what about that Senate investigation?" "What has happened to constitutional rights in New Jersey?" "Our leaders have been jailed, our rights taken away, halls closed and free speech denied. What are you going to do about it?"

Another committee carrying similar signs will picket Governor A. Harry Moore's house in Jersey City tomorrow.

Sheriff Morgan of Passaic County, where most of the mills are located, indicated in Paterson that he was preparing to read the riot act in Passaic and was swearing in deputies to assist in preventing assemblages.

An autopsy performed on the body of Frank Gido, a striker, by County Physician William H. Gogden and Dr. Daniel Tallman indicated that the man died of natural causes and not from a blow of a policeman's club, as rumored shortly after his death this morning.

Eight strikers were arrested near the home of a negro worker in the United Piece Dye Works at Lodi when they sought to induce him to join the strike. They were fined $12.50 each.

Four meetings of strikers were held today, two in Passaic. The meetings were orderly, and no untoward incidents occurred.

Mayor Samuel Nelkin of Wallington, a municipality adjoining Passaic, tonight offered to the strikers the use of seven lots in Wallington for their meetings. He said he disapproved of the action of Sheriff Nimmo in reading the riot act and offered the property for peaceful assemblages because of his interest in free speech.

ACID-THROWING ENDS IN FUR STRIKE FIGHT

Striking fur workers resorted to sabotage yesterday, according to complaints received by the police, and two men were arrested after a fight in a fur shop, while a third was held for throwing acid on a woman's fur coat.

Fifteen strikers invaded the shop of Jacob Lipton on the fifth floor of 123 West Twenty-eighth Street yesterday afternoon and threw acid on fur coats hanging on racks near the door. Lipton and his assistants attacked the strikers with furriers' knives and in the scuffle that followed Abraham Weisz of 657 Vermont Street, Brooklyn, was badly cut on his hands and body. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital a prisoner, and Abraham Reider of 234 East 108th Street, was locked up at the West Thirtieth Street station, both charged with malicious mischief. Lipton was also arrested by Patrolman Devine on a charge of felonious assault.

In the Jefferson Market Court Magistrate Norman E. Marsh held Charles Seigel of 1,205 Findlay Avenue, the Bronx, in $1,000 bail for a hearing tomorrow, after it was alleged he threw acid on the fur coat of a woman employed in a furrier's shop.

The complainant against him was Harriet Walters of 104 West Thirty-sixth Street. She said Seigel had followed her for several days in an effort to intimidate her. On Monday he threw acid on her coat at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-eighth Street and she narrowly escaped being burned, she said.

BANDIT KILLS A SHERIFF.

Shoots Him Near Chicago After Flight With Stolen Car.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 14.—Walter Fisher, 23, Deputy Sheriff of Will County, was shot and killed today while chasing a bandit in a stolen automobile who headed for Chicago after robbing a physician at Mokena, Ill. The shooting occurred on the outskirts of Chicago.

According to Barney Hostert, Mokena garage man, who drove Fisher, after nine miles of chase, with traffic becoming momentarily heavier, the bandit slowed down and allowed their car to catch up.

Just as Fisher was about to leap into the bandit's machine one bullet struck him in the head, another over the heart and a third in the hand. The bandit put on high speed and escaped.

The stolen car is owned by Dr. E. G. McMahon of Mokena. The bandit accosted the physician at 9:30 A. M. as he was entering the village on the Lincoln Highway.

Fisher was married and had two children.

REVIEWS HIS CAREER IN SEVEN-PAGE WILL

TAKES BURIAL PRECAUTIONS

He Wants Two Physicians to Make Sure He Is Dead—Sister Gets Estate.

Directions designed to preclude any chance of being buried alive, a three-page exposition on "the four principal elements or commandments of the True Christian Religion," and diagrams of keys to boxes holding his personal papers, are contained in the seven-page will of Albert Peter Schack, which was filed for probate yesterday. Mr. Schack was the brother of Mrs. Archibald Gracie of Washington, D. C. He died on March 2.

The will provides that before Mr. Schack's body shall be prepared for burial two reputable physicians shall closely examine the body, confer, and testify to his sister that it is actually lifeless.

In a life sketch incorporated in the will, which Mr. Schack desired should be used at the funeral services, he described himself as follows:

"Mr. Albert Peter Shack, who has now passed consciously into the spiritual world, was first educated to be a mining engineer in the School of Mines of Columbia College (now university). After working some years at this profession he studied for the ministry and conducted services and preached in several cities, and though never ordained by man, but being a disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ from his youth and a daily student of His Word with prayer, he hoped that he was called or ordained by the Lord Himself as a minister of the gospel, and regarded himself as such, though not a sectarian, but as a simple Christian of the 'New Christian Church' on the earth.

"He was an author of several religious and secular works, both books and pamphlets, all of which he wrote and had published and circulated for the purpose of benefiting his own country and the world, and instructing them in many ways, especially that they might know and keep what he considered the four principal elements or commandments of the True Christian Religion, namely: First, the Ten Commandments (Ex., xx, 1-7); second, the two Great Commandments (Matth., xxii, 37-40); third, the Golden Rule (Matth. vii, 12); fourth, the Lord's New Commandment (John, xv., 12)."

Mr. Schack believed that these precepts should be taught in every school and college, and he suggested in the will that they be engraved on a modest headstone over his grave, together with a brief sketch of the work he had done in promulgating them throughout the world.

SCAN DESERT IN VAIN FOR MISSING FLIERS

British Airmen in Egypt Lose Hope of Finding Captain Estevez and Mechanician.

OTHER SPANIARDS IN INDIA

CAIRO, Egypt, April 14 (AP).—Captain Estevez, the leader of the Spanish Air Expedition frm Madrid to Manila, and his mechanician, Calvo seemingly are lost in the Syrian desert. Their plane, which they deserted Sunday 100 miles from Amman, while on the Cairo to Bagdad flight, has been found, but no trace of the aviators.

Responding to the appeal of Silvio Vallin, Spanish Minister to Egypt, the British Vice Air Marshal here declared that everything humanly possible was being done to locate the missing men. Numerous British aviators are flying low in every direction in their search, but it is possible that Estevez and Calvo may have become exhausted, either through the burning heat or lack of food and water, and it would be a difficult matter to spot their bodies.

At the same time there have been various rumors that they have been found, but thus far confirmation of this is lacking. It is thought that if the fliers had been rescued by a caravan definite news would have been received by this time.

KARACHI, British India, April 14 (AP).—Half of the Spanish air flight from Madrid, Spain, to Manila, Philippine Islands, has been completed with the arrival here today of Captains Gallarza and Loriga. Today's flight was from Bender Abbas, Persia, a distance of about 725 miles. The next hop, to Agra, 800 miles, will be made tomorrow.

ITALY HAS BUDGET SURPLUS

ROME, April 14 (AP).—The report of the Minister of Finance on the budget for 1926-27, made public today, shows a surplus of 365,000,000 lire, the income being set down as 18,300,000,000 lire as against 17,935,000,000 lire expenditures.

The estimate of income does not include 459,000,000 lire from reparation payments, put aside for payments on the debt to Great Britain and the United States.

INDUSTRIAL COURT OPPOSED BY WOLL

Labor Leader Says Compulsory Settlement of Union Disputes Would Fail.

Discussion of the establishment of a United States Industrial Court to settle disputes between employers and employes and of legislation whereby the ordinary courts could enforce contracts between unions and employers occupied the entire session of the meeting yesterday of the Committee on Commerce, Trade and Commercial Law of the American Bar Association in progress since Tuesday in the rooms of the New York Chamber of Commerce. The committee will report to the American Bar Association at its annual meeting in Denver next July.

Appearing for the American Federation of Labor was Matthew Woll, a Vice President of the organization and President of the International Photo-Engravers' Union. He declared the Federation was absolutely opposed to compulsory legislation to enforce contracts between collective groups, although he admitted that in theory an industrial tribunal might in some cases be desirable.

"Enforcement of contracts by law," Mr. Woll declared, "is fraught with complications and entanglements. Economic fluctuating tendencies and factors that no one can foresee would make the fixing of wages and hours of work by an official court unconstitutional and impracticable. Wherever it has been attempted, in New Zealand, Australia, Colorado, and Kansas, it has proved a failure. The compromises that result from persuasive measures is better than the processes of law. It is the practical consequences of compulsion that make this plan impracticable."

Asked what constructive suggestion the federation had to offer, Mr. Woll replied that the Legislature ought to define clearly and exactly what the rights of the unions and the employers were, but without attempting to prevent or block absolute freedom of collective action.

Former Judge William L. Huggins, author of the Kansas Industrial act and first Presiding Judge of the Industrial Commission, urged the support of the American Bar Association for a similar bill.

Other speakers included Senator William R. Eaton of Colorado, and Murray T. Quigg, representing the League for Industrial Rights.

The hearing will be concluded this morning.

If Clothes were listed on the Stock Exchange

A DECLINING market is the acid test of values. This is just as true of clothes as it is of stocks and bonds.

And if clothes were listed on the stock exchange, you would see D'Andrea's preferred—in a falling or a rising market—generally accepted as a gilt-edge investment.

D'Andrea Brothers' clothes do not figure in the forced liquidation of mark-downs and bargain sales. The value in D'Andrea clothes is too stable and too generally recognized to require such methods.

When you buy D'Andrea clothes, you are investing—not speculating. Any D'Andrea garment is a sound investment that will give you the unquestioned security of full value and regular dividends of fit and looks and satisfaction.

Most of D'Andrea Brothers' customers are experienced business men who have learned that in the long run it is more profitable to invest than to speculate. In buying clothes from D'Andrea Brothers, they pay a fair price for real value—and they get it.

If a tailoring service based upon a sincere belief in these principles of merchandising appeals to you, we can demonstrate its advantages in a single garment, just as well as in an entire wardrobe.

D'Andrea Brothers regard every new purchaser of a single garment as an opportunity to win a steady customer. It is a fact that eighty per cent of the men who once buy from D'Andrea Brothers later become regular customers.

We hope that you will give us an opportunity to show you why.

FIGHT OVER DELAY IN ST. PAUL INQUIRY

Bondholders' Counsel Calls It a Scheme to Force Through Chicago Court Case.

HEARINGS ARE PUT OVER

Ryan Tells of Buying Power Sites When Road Took Up Puget Sound Electrification.

Hearings in the Interstate Commerce Commission's investigation of the receivership of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company before Commissioner Frederick I. Cox in the offices of the Port of New York Authority, at 11 Broadway, were adjourned yesterday until next week amid heated arguments of attorneys.

When Commissioner Cox announced that the hearings would be resumed next Tuesday or Wednesday in the assembly room of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company at 1 Madison Avenue, O. W. Dynes, counsel for the St. Paul, said he would have to attend a hearing before Federal Judge Wilkerson in Chicago April 26 and might have to remain there several days.

"This is a scheme to force through the Chicago court proceedings before attorneys for the other side can get there to contradict the evidence being submitted. This is a part of their tactics, a manoeuvre to hurry through their testimony in Chicago."

Sanford Freund, Secretary of the Kuhn, Loeb & Co. bond committee, said that the date of the Chicago hearing had not been set by the railroad or the reorganization interests.

Fisher to Go West.

Walter L. Fisher, special counsel for the Commerce Commission, protested against Mr. Dynes's proposed trip to Chicago. The adjournment yesterday was taken because Mr. Fisher has to appear in the Supreme Court in Springfield, Ill., on a case not connected with the St. Paul. Whether the hearings are resumed here Tuesday or Wednesday will depend largely upon the time of Mr. Fisher's return.

Mr. Prentice's bondholders' committee contends that the purchase by the St. Paul of the Terre Haute and Gary lines had much to do with the St. Paul's financial collapse.

Experts of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who recently completed an examination of the St. Paul's condition, have offered documentary evidence that the Terre Haute and Gary represented a $10,000,000 drain on the St. Paul, and that, while the St. Paul's books seemed to indicate the two acquired roads had saved the St. Paul $2,000,000, they had actually caused it a loss of approximately $500,000.

Mr. Prentice contended that to bring favorable testimony about the Terre Haute and Gary before Judge Wilkerson at a time when it could not be refuted by the other side, because of their attorneys' absence from Chicago, was merely a scheme to get Judge Wilkerson to approve the payment of interest on the Terre Haute and Gary bonds before he could hear all from the other parties interested.

Ryan Tells of Electrification.

The only witness yesterday was John D. Ryan, Chairman of the Board of the Anaconda Copper Company and formerly a director of the St. Paul. He was active on the St. Paul board when the road electrified its Puget Sound extension, for which it paid millions of dollars to power companies in which Mr. Ryan was interested.

Daniel H. Grady, Special Assistant Attorney General of Wisconsin, drew from Mr. Ryan information that he had purchased from the St. Paul two power sites for which he had paid $970,000; that he had capitalized them at $3,000,000 and had earned last year 6½ per cent. on the capitalization.

After buying the sites, the witness said, he organized the Thompson Falls Power Company and placed on that organization's records the two sites, which were listed as assets worth $5,000,000. The Montana Power Company then purchased the Thompson Falls Company by giving for it $5,000,000 of its common stock. Mr. Ryan said the market value of these securities at the time was not more than $970,000.

Mr. Grady asked Mr. Ryan if he did not consider it a "strange coincidence" that the St. Paul took up the matter of electrifying its Puget Sound extension soon after he had become a St. Paul director. Mr. Ryan smiled as he answered:

"Well, I was very enthusiastic about electrification of railroads at that time and that may have had something to do with it."

INJUNCTION GRANTED ON MENCKEN PLEA

BOSTON, April 14 (AP).—A temporary injunction to restrain the Watch and Ward Society from interfering with the distribution of The American Mercury was granted by Judge Morton in Federal Court today.

In announding his decision the Judge said that, in his opinion, it was "plainly illegal" for J. Frank Chase, Secretary of the society, to order news companies to refrain from handling publications of which he disapproved.

"The defendants," he said, "have the right of every citizen to come into court with complaints, but they have no right to impose their opinions on the book and magazine trade by threat of prosecution if their views are not accepted."

The case was brought before the Federal Court on injunction proceedings after H. L. Mencken, editor of The American Mercury, had been arrested for selling on Boston Common a copy of the April issue of the magazine. The issue had been suppressed on complaint of Mr. Chase on the ground that one article contained in it was obscene.

Mencken was acquitted by Judge Parmenter in Municipal Court when the Judge, after reading the article in question, ruled that it contained nothing likely to endanger the morals of the young.

Arthur Garfield Hays of New York, counsel for Mr. Mencken, told the Federal Court that agents of the Watch and Ward Society were able, by threatening the news companies with criminal prosecution to suppress any book or magazine to which they objected. The attorney charged that in the case of The American Mercury the action of Mr. Chase was actuated by "motives of malice and revenge" because of an attack on the Watch and Ward Society contained in a previous issue.

In his decision today Judge Morton said in part:

"The question is whether the course followed by the society is a legal course of conduct. May an unofficial organization, actuated by a sincere desire to benefit the public and to strengthen the administration of the law, carry out its purpose by threatening with criminal prosecution those who deal in magazines which it regards as illegal? The effect of this action is, as a practical matter, to exclude such magazines from sale through ordinary channels and therefore to inflict loss on their proprietors."

BERLIN SAYS JAZZ IS DYING.

Writes From London That People Want Sentimental Ballads.

The pendulum of popular favor is swinging away from jazz to ballads of the days of crinoline, in the opinion of Irving Berlin.

Writing to Sam H. Harris, theatrical producer, from London, where the song writer has been since his marriage to Ellin Mackay several months ago, Berlin declares his belief that the jazz age is passing and that "the people want something with a bit of feeling and sentiment."

Predicts Jewish Revival.

Rabbi Michael Aaronsohn, sightless chaplain of the National Association of Disabled War Veterans predicted yesterday a revival of religious interest among Jews in an address to students of the religious schools of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, at 1,529 Broadway. Rabbi Aaronsohn, who is Field Secretary of the Union, said that in a recent tour of the country he found a great revival of Jewish consciousness and an awakened interest in the establishment of religious schools and seminaries.

KANE, 87, IS HONORED BY ELECTIONS BOARD

John R. Voorhis, President, Who Is 97 and a Birthday Party Expert, Leads Festivities.

YOUTHFUL MEMBERS OUT

Commissioner James Kane of the Board of Elections, who is 87 years old today, was honored at a birthday party yesterday in the offices of the board in the Municipal Building. The festivities were directed by John R. Voorhis, President of the board, an expert on birthday parties. He is 97 years old.

Only the mature members of the board were permitted to appear in the forefront of the party. The two Republican members were left on the outside; not just because they happened to be Republicans, but because of their youth. They were Charles E. Heydt, who is a mere 49 years old, and Jacob A. Livingston, Brooklyn's Republican leader, who is 51 years old.

"I feel like an infant in swaddling clothes," said Commissioner Heydt, "and infants should be seen and not heard."

President Voorhis presented his colleague with a lounging robe, cane and umbrella on behalf of the staff.

"My mother said that in buying clothes," he remarked, "they should be large and roomy enough so that you will not outgrow them, and my wishes are that you will wear this lounging robe until it gets threadbare at the elbows."

Commissioner Livingston, plainly conscious that he should be silent in the presence of his elders, but determined to speak, just the same, added:

"We two Republican kids have great pleasure in taking part in this affair. The atmosphere of the Board of Elections is certainly healthful and beneficial to longevity."

When President Voorhis said he favored the movement to extend the maximum age limit for public officers beyond the present limit of 70 years, specifically citing Commissioner Kane, the birthday celebrant broke in to ask, "What about old Voorhis?" and President Voorhis, who is the Grand Sachem of Tammany Hall, led the laughter.

Commissioner Kane has been the Democratic leader of the Third Assembly District, Brooklyn, for fifty-seven years and is believed to be the oldest Democratic leader, in point of service, in the country.

McKee Says Negotiations With Private Companies Are Almost Completed.

Predicting that a city bus system would be running by July 1, Joseph V. McKee, President of the Board of Aldermen, told the members of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation at its monthly meeting yesterday at the Aster that negotiations with bus companies were almost ready to close. President McKee said some of the bus lines now running were ill kept and ill managed.

"The city cannot run buses under the law," he said, "and we must ask private capital to do it."

Mr. McKee spoke on the problems that faced the Walker Administration when it entered office last January, and particularly the transportation difficulties. He referred to the new subways under construction and predicted additional ones for the completion of these by present.

"We are doing our best," he said, "and we don't want people to become hysterical when they see that all our problems are not immediately solved. Within a short time Mayor Walker is going to appoint committees to conduct surveys of this and other problems facing the city."

Referring to the Hylan Administration, he said there had been hysteria on the part of city officials and "too much bunk in the City Hall."

C. F. Kettering, President of the General Motors Research Corporation, spoke of the growth of the automotive industry and its problems. Mr. Kettering said that financial men had criticised this growth as unsound, declaring that people were buying too many automobiles. The speaker pointed to the growth of savings bank deposits as a refutation.

Besides the President, Walter J. L. Banham of the Otis Elevator Company, those at the speakers' table were President Patrick E. Crowley of the New York Central, Jules Bache, C. Stanley Mitchell, H. E. M. Cowie and A. J. McComb.

Says Expense Keeps Postal Rate Up.

WASHINGTON, April 14 (AP).—Increased expenses, including wage increases of $200,000,000 over the operating costs of 1920, make it inadvisable for the Postoffice Department to return to the postal rates then in effect, as provided in the McKellar bill, Joseph Stewart, executive secretary, today told the joint postal subcommittee.

ROCKEFELLER JR. NO GOLFER

Says He Does Not Understand Baseball Either.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., April 14 (AP).—John D. Rockefeller Jr. does not understand baseball and does not play golf.

Mr. Rockefeller, here in the interests of the Phi Beta Kappa $1,000,000 endowment fund, said he knew "nothing of baseball." "I never go to the games," he said. Horseback riding and outdoor tennis furnish his chief diversions, he said.

He deplored the materialism of the day and said he felt that the need of the age was spiritual.

Two Women to Receive Medals.

The American Academy of Arts and Letters announced yesterday that on Friday, April 23 the gold medal of the Academy would be awarded to Miss Cecilia Beaux, the portrait artist who has been listed as one of twelve great American women. At the same time Mrs. Mary E. Wilkins Freeman will receive the Howells medal for distinguished work in fiction. A bronze bas-relief of William Dean Howells will also be unveiled.

SAYS SCIENCE HOLDS NATIONS TOGETHER

Prof. Pupin Declares It Lays True Foundation for League of Nations.

AIDS WORLD COOPERATION

Speakers at Electrotechnical Meeting Tell of Progress Through Invention.

The example of international cooperation set by scientists and engineers was emphasized by Professor Michael I. Pupin and other speakers at the luncheon of the International Electrotechnical Commission at the Hotel Commodore yesterday. After some reminiscences of his youth in Serbia, Dr. Pupin said:

"As I look at you now, and see so many delegates from various countries representing various nations and various religions, I cannot help thinking that the best way to greet you for me is the way my father used to greet the fellow-peasants from the other villages. 'Welcome, komshiya, welcome, our dearly beloved neighbors. Nay, you are closer than neighbors.

"The names Volt, Ampere, Ohm, Faraday, Henry, Gauss, Coulomb, Joule are household gods, and they remind us that we have the same interest and worship at the altar of the same patron saints—Kelvin, Helmholtz, Maxwell, Hertz, Siemens, Gramme, Pacinotti. We have the same household gods and the same patron saints. We all are one.

Would Like Mayor There.

"So each one of these meetings looks more and more like a family gathering. I wish that the Mayor were here and that the Board of Aldermen of New York City were here. I wish that the American Congress were here and the American Senate to watch our proceedings and learn that the scientist and the engineer have discovered the great secret—greater than anything in electrical science or any other science—the secret of how to lay the true foundation for a true League of Nations.

"I have come here in company with fourteen nations, or the representatives of fourteen nations. We were on the ship together. I think there were over a hundred of us, representatives of different nations, which our good friend has referred to as being good neighbors. It was a very wise thing, I think, in the organizers of this conference that we did come together. We had an opportunity of getting to know one another. We had an opportunity of rubbing off the rough corners, and that is a great asset and will, I think, facilitate the work that is being done here.

"I can assure you that I and my four colleagues on my main committee, and I am sure all the other national chairmen, have come here with the determination to make a hearty effort to lay at least the foundation of an international, broad, standardising body, standardising association we might perhaps call it.

Praises America's Energy.

"This is not my first visit to America, not by a long way. I know that there are many of my friends whose first visit it is, but I, coming by sea as I have frequently done to New York, have always been impressed upon arrival to see that towering skyline of buildings in lower New York. Some people criticise that, but I feel it is an evidence of the energy of the American nation, always soaring toward the sky.

"It typifies to me that energy and we come here to admire your energy and growth. Of course we find details, certain things which are different from home, but I would advise those whose first visit it is, rather to seek for the things that are new to them, to study why they are done, to admire the energy that has created these things, and if they occupy their time in that, they will have very little time to criticise anything that they many find fault with."

The technical sessions of the commission began yesterday afternoon.

WON'T HEAR REYNOLDS CASE

Supreme Court Justice Harry E. Lewis in Brooklyn refused yesterday the request of the Attorney General's office to preside at the new trial of former Mayor William H. Reynolds of Long Beach or to set a date for the trial. Justice Lewis based his refusal on the ground that he had once opposed Reynolds in private litigation.

Special Deputy Attorney General Kenneth M. Spence, who presented the request, said Justice Lewis's action would make it necessary for him to apply to Presiding Justice William J. Kelly of the Appellate Division to set a date and assign a Justice to conduct the trial.

The same trial court will also dispose of the new trials of John Gracy, former Treasurer of Long Beach, and Charles C. Clark, former Corporation Counsel, who was charged with acceptance of a fee for private practice while retaining his official position. The charges against Reynolds and Gracy relate to a bond issue by the municipality. Their convictions were reversed.

The charges grew out of an investigation in 1924 into alleged irregularities in the government of Nassau County by an Extraordinary Grand Jury, by order of Governor Smith. Deputy Attorney General Spence conducted the inquiry.

Now you can buy until the entire Thermiodyne surplus stock is distributed. But even this great quantity may not be enough, because the fame of the 5-Tube Thermiodyne has spread far and wide!

We recommend early selection and installation. ...This is ideal radio weather...And the programs are getting better and better every day in every way!

An Advanced Radio Set

Technically the 5-Tube Thermiodyne is a powerful, highly selective set, with two stages of tuned radio frequency. The product of a great radio engineer, it embodies ideas far in advance of the industry at the time of its creation. Operates either on an indoor or an outdoor aerial. Encased in an attractively finished cabinet of beautiful design.

The Famous Master Control

The Master Control—an exclusive Thermiodyne feature—makes it possible for a child to operate the set. It is merely a master knob that regulates all tuning, when the receiver is once adjusted. Separate vernier controls are provided for delicate adjustments.

Andrews Says Probably Only One Still Out of Every Ten Operating Is Seized

facturing apparatus, was on the stand, Senator Reed asked Mr. Williams if he thought a man should be condemned to penal servitude for selling another man a glass of beer. Mr. Williams replied that, in his opinion, that should be the punishment meted out to such a violator.

"Do you not think," asked Senator Reed, rising to his feet and facing the witness, "it would be a worse crime to take a man from his family and lock him in a penitentiary for a year or two and put prison stripes on him—that would be an infinitely worse crime against nature than the act of selling a man a glass of beer who wanted to buy it? Would not the law be the worst criminal of the two?"

"I do not think so," Mr. Williams answered.

"I just wondered how case hardened you were," said Mr. Reed. Turning toward the audience he continued:

"Now I think it is time for people to understand that the law can itself constitute a crime. And that the English law that took a man and killed him for killing a rabbit is just as much or a worse murderer than the man who killed a rabbit as killing a man is worse than killing a rabbit. That is what I think, if you want my opinion, and I think anybody of a contrary view is absolutely heartless, and that they have allowed their enthusiasm to rise to the point of insanity."

Two women in the front row, one of them young, led the demonstration that followed as Senator Reed sat down.

ANDREWS TAKES THE STAND.

As General Andrews took the witness chair Colonel Codman recalled that when the General was before the committee last week the final part of his testimony related to diversion of industrial alcohol, the problem of smuggling and the border patrol.

"I desire this morning," said Colonel Codman, "to take up the question of illicit distilling, which I understand is one of the major problems of your department."

"Yes, that is so, and it is becoming more so," replied General Andrews.

"I have here," continued Colonel Codman, "a statement copied from the annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue which lists the seizures of stills and other material from 1921 to the present time."

"I am not familiar with it, but I will assume it is correct," said General Andrews.

"I find in this list," Colonel Codman said, "that in 1921 there was a total of 95,923 stills seized by the prohibition agents throughout the whole country. That includes distilleries, stills, still worms and other paraphernalia. In 1922 the figure was 111,155; in 1923 the number of stills and other paraphernalia seized was 158,132; in 1924 the number seized was 159,176 and in 1925 the number seized was 172,537.

"So that there seems to be a continuous mounting in the number of stills seized annually, and is it a fair inference from that, do you think, with the knowledge of the work, that the number of stills throughout the country is actually increasing?"

"I do not know whether it is that," replied General Andrews, "or whether it is better activity on the part of the agents. I just do not know, but that is a fair inference. In order to answer your question, I will say that."

"What I was suggesting," Colonel Codman explained, "was this: That it seems the capturing of a vast numbeа of stills and everything else, such as 159,176 in 1924, should have reduced to some extent the number of stills. Yet the very next year we get 172,537. Unless we are having the same stills set up again almost immediately after being captured by the same person, but of scattered material, it would seem almost impossible to have the figures we find. Do not you think so?"

Uncertain Percentage Seized.

"I agree that it means a great many people are distilling," said General Andrews.

Colonel Codman—I do not suppose that we can hope—that you can hope to catch more than a certain percentage of the actual stills in existence. A.—Or an uncertain percentage, I would say.

Q.—That is, it is only a small part of the stills, with your limited force, that you can actually apprehend? There must be a great many you do not know anything about. A.—There must be some that I do not know anything about.

Q.—Do you not suppose that there are probably a great many more that you do not know about than the number of stills you do know about? A.—I am depending very largely for the capture of stills on local cooperation, you understand—on local information and on local law enforcement, as I call it.

Q.—Then in some places where you do not get good local law enforcement you probably catch a comparatively small percentage of the stills in existence in that area? A.—You know the answer to that as well as I do, Colonel Codman.

Q.—I am sorry to say that I must ask for your answer, not mine. A.—Well, I do not know the answer.

Q.—You are in charge of the whole business of enforcing prohibition? A.—Yes.

Q.—Consequently your knowledge of this subject is of real importance to the country, whereas I am an inconspicuous person, and my knowledge of this subject is of no importance. Consequently I have to ask you for information.

"What is the answer to that question?" interposed Senator Reed.

"I think that is not so," replied General Andrews. "I think we catch a very fair percentage of the stills."

"Yes, sir; I mean large stills, commercial stills, for instance," the witness replied.

Colonel Codman—I see a great many of these stills here on this list are not commercial stills; is not that so? A.—I am sorry I cannot answer that question. I just do not know.

Q.—You had in mind in answering my question, however, commercial stills? You had that in mind when you were arguing my question, did you not? A.—Yes, sir.

Senator Reed—General Andrews, I wish you would tell us what you meant by the words "commercial stills," or the words "large stills." A.—I meant a still where the man who runs it is making liquor for sale.

Q.—That is, whether the still is big or little? A.—Yes, whether it is a big or a little still. If he is making liquor to put into the liquor traffic, that is what I meant by my answer.

Seeks Only the Large Violators.

"What I want to get at," Senator Reed said, "by my question is this: I want to know whether you are talking about the man who goes into making liquor as a business, sets up a still and makes it in considerable quantities and either bootlegs it himself or furnishes it to other bootleggers, or whether you are intending to include everybody who may make a little alcohol in his home, barn or garage and peddles a few gallons of it."

"I think that my agents have very little contact with the latter class," replied General Andrews.

"With the small class?" asked Mr. Reed.

"Yes, and less and less contact with them since I have gotten my instructions and my policy in force," said General Andrews. "I think quite naturally matters like that must be handled by the local authorities. I think that is the way you understand it?

A.—My understanding is that where the alcohol source of supply is not available, then comes in the moonshine, as we call it, source of supply.

Q.—That is, then you cut off a source of supply of another nature the moonshine wells up to fill the gap? A.—Right; and I am finding it increasing in the big cities of the East where the diversion supply has been available.

DEMAND FOR ILLICIT LIQUOR.

"On yesterday we had some testimony from a priest of the Roman Catholic Church whose parish is in the mining districts of Pennsylvania," Colonel Codman said. "He testified that in a great many homes there were small stills, very much smaller than the sample you were kind enough to lend me today and which is now set up here before the committee."

"Well, I loaned that still to the subcommittee," General Andrews remarked.

"Very well, and in that way you favored me as well," Senator Reed interrupted. "And in that way, I might add, you prevented its employment during the term it is out of your possession."

"Probably a precautionary measure, you suggest?" General Andrews asked.

"But to continue seriously, the priest here yesterday," Colonel Codman resumed, "stated there would be a small still in a very large percentage of the miners' homes, where they make their own liquor, and which naturally, on account of environment, became very familiar to the women and children of the community.

"Shortly afterward Mrs. Viola Anglin, who is Chief Deputy Probation Officer of the Family Court in New York City, took the stand and testified to similar conditions among the working people and in the tenements of New York City.

"It, therefore, seemed to me a fair inference that where the still was necessary to supply the demands of the community the stills were there. In a general way has that been your experience, also, General Andrews?"

"Yes," General Andrews replied. "I will put it this way: that where the demand exists the supply appears, if possible. If possible, I repeat. I think the old law of supply and demand carries in the case of bootleg liquor, as in the case of any other merchandise."

State Cooperation Necessary.

"Now, General Andrews, with the forces at your command at the present time, I think you have stated with the utmost frankness that the problem of the little still, the moonshine problem of small-scale production of liquor, is one which must be taken care of by local people?"

"Yes," replied General Andrews.

Q.—And the reason for that is you have neither the men nor the equipment nor appropriation to carry on that work successfully; that is correct, is it not? A.—Yes; that is literally correct.

Q.—I think you testified the other day that if you were to get a little effective cooperation from the States it would undoubtedly increase the expense to the States, did you not? A.—I do not think so.

Q.—Well, I may be in error; but is not that a fact in a way? A.—Is it fair to regard as included in your question the returns to the State from fines? Is that included in your thought in asking me that question?

Q.—It was not, no. A.—If immediately entered my mind that from the fines there would get revenue that would be more than the cost of the law enforcement.

Q.—Well, where the stills— A.—That has been the experience, I understand, in the enforcement of the law by the States.

Q.—That possibly would be your explanation of why no State has appropriated any money to carry out their local enforcement laws; is that what you believe? A.—I think the State has existing machinery, through police and courts, to enforce its laws, and does not have to make any additional appropriation.

Q.—But in the States which have supporting acts, such as the Southern States, your people have seized this actually enormous number of stills? A.—Yes; but I have not assumed it was for lack of machinery in the States that we had to do this.

Q.—What was it, lack of interest? A.—Lack of activity.

Q.—And yet all these Southern States are dry, are they not? A.—Yes, all are dry States.

Reed Becomes Impatient.

"Is not activity in the way of law enforcement always somewhat more expensive than inactivity; does it not usually mean a larger force of men?" Colonel Codman asked.

"I hardly think it is necessary to take up time with that, because it is perfectly obvious that if there are thousands of arrests made it means more jails, it means more penitentiaries, it means more courts, it means more juries, and it means an enlargement of the machinery of the law inevitably," Senator Reed interjected. "It argues its own answer. I do not believe that General Andrews could give us any light on that that we do not possess ourselves. If General Andrews should deny that proposition I would have to differ from him, and that is all."

"Well, I do not know anything about it," said General Andrews.

Colonel Codman read to General Andrews from THE NEW YORK TIMES of the proposed law, and the General recommended as follows:

"When a search warrant may be issued as provided by the national prohibition act to search any private dwelling as such dwelling is defined in that act, if any still or any distilling apparatus is used or set up for use therein for the unlawful manufacture of intoxicating liquor."

"What type of stills were you intending to reach by that section?" Colonel Codman asked.

"The commercial still," General Andrews replied. "The bootleg industry in large cities, with the lessening of the denatured alcohol source of supply, is taking advantage of the fundamental law which makes the private dwelling the castle of the individual which you have no machinery to ascertain or interfere with?"

"Absolutely. We are clear now, I believe," General Andrews answered.

Colonel Codman—And all those stills may, in the aggregate, produce a very large amount of alcohol, may they not? A.—Yes.

Q.—And that would be entirely beyond your knowledge? A.—Yes.

Q.—And what I meant to describe when I said "very large amount of alcohol" was really a considerable quantity, a considerable addition to the amount of alcohol in the country. It might represent millions of gallons, might it not? A.—I think that might be true.

Q.—Now I find that captures of stills seem to be principally in States which were dry, to use the ordinary term, before the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment. I find from examining subsidiary figures to those which I gave you before that in Georgia, for instance, in 1923, 21,031 stills were seized, in 1922, three years before, 20,400 stills were seized and in 1921 19,526 stills were seized there. In North Carolina—and I shall not read all the figures I have—there was some rise in captures of stills from 1922 to 1925, the figure in round numbers being 14,500 in 1923 and 21,700 in 1925. And a very large number of stills were seized in Tennessee, Florida, Virginia, Kentucky and Alabama, and a smaller but still very considerable number in South Carolina and Oklahoma. Now, General Andrews, I want to know if, as a matter of fact, those are the States in which there are not very large industrial alcohol plants. A.—That is a matter of fact, yes.

Q.—That is so, as a matter of fact? A.—Yes.

Q.—I am asking if it is not a fair inference that, where easy diversions of alcohol are made from industrial plants, the existence of stills is not needed to supply what we call the bootleg trade, but where large industrial plants do not exist we find the still coming in to take the place of the diversions of alcohol from industrial plants. A.—Yes, or other source of bootleg supply.

Q.—Or other source of bootleg supply? A.—That is exactly my understanding.

Q.—That is the way you understand it?

little while, a charred keg, and let these fumes get away from the liquor, they would have a pretty fair quality of good old-fashioned moonshine, that would be true, would it not? A.—I think so. It will accomplish it.

Q.—And of course, if they use tin pails or anything else except copper they get no end of more or less poisonous or deleterious substances, which they take into their stomachs? A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know how much of that kind of liquor was drunk that caused those scenes of sub-chasers to crash on one rock out in the Pacific Ocean? A.—No.

Q.—Whatever it was, it was done under prohibition. If there was any drinking that caused it I never heard that charge. I don't think there was. I think that was a mistake of bearings, and I do not think any body could be charged with being drunk at the time he attached that apparatus at the top of it? A.—Yes, in that shape, without this goose-neck on that would be a can or some container. It would not be a complete still.

Q.—It would be a wash boiler up to that point? A.—If this were soldered on it would be more of a can. You could hardly use it as a wash boiler with that on.

Q.—You do not have to have that soldered on. It could be fastened on without being soldered? A.—It would have to be fastened, otherwise it would blow off.

Q.—Suppose they fastened it on with a strap or chain or wire? A.—I have seen them that way.

Q.—I am trying to get at your difficulties in this matter. Does there have to be an air-tight connection there in the cover? A.—That is best, otherwise it would seep out, spill and boil over.

Q.—But a lid can be made that is practically air-tight without soldering it? A.—Yes, by having it strapped over. They have done that.

Contraption Easily Taken Apart.

"So," that if a man had one of these concerns such as you have just recently described, which would be a wash boiler, if he took the top apparatus off, these little pipes, all that you would find, if you found it at all, would be the pipes out in his barn or some other place, or you might not find them at all?" said Mr. Reed.

"That is very often the case," replied Mr. Williams.

Q.—That is very often the case. So that you have that sort of a difficulty with this kind of a still, which has this large capacity, and the smaller and simpler stills are even more difficult to detect, that is true? You have nodded your head. [Their answer so the stenographer gets it. A.—Yes, that is true.

Q.—How long have you been connected with the prohibition unit? A.—Since May, 1922.

Q.—In that time have you made a practice of searching many private residences? A.—No, sir. I have not.

Q.—I do not mean you, I mean the department, men under you. Or have they confined their attention generally to concerns that are making considerable quantities? I am speaking of it generally. We know there are exceptions to all rules. A.—Well, the forces have been divided. The field force for the stills, and the force for investigational purposes, and working jointly in the past with the Police Department here, and of course we have been in connection with the local work and on the other work of taking the stills. There are various branches of that. But the local work is done largely by the Police Department through their investigations after the smaller stills, after these small ones. This was a still that was apprehended by the police of, I think, the Eighth Precinct.

Q.—I noticed you brought over a bucket here this morning as one of the exhibits. What was that? A.—It was in connection with this seizure.

Q.—Oh, yes. That is the bucket that they carried water or something in? A.—Possibly for catching the finished product.

Q.—But in general you have not understood that a boiler with a capacity of forty gallons a day if he wants to? Said Senator Reed. A.—Yes.

"And if you do not catch him or somebody does not catch him," asked the Missouri Senator.

"That is so," said Mr. Williams.

"This particular still appears to be a wash boiler," went on Mr. Reed. "A copper wash boiler and they have soldered on top of it a round receptacle to catch the fumes, and soldered then two pieces of copper pipe to it, and then a hose is attached. There is no reason why that attached apparatus could not be made to screw on or fasten on without being soldered on, is there, so that it could be separated from the top of the boiler?"

"Yes, they come that way by screw caps in various forms of cans and threads, and they thread the goose-neck connection and make a very tight joint, here, which would go into the goose-neck and into the coil and container and pass off that way," said the witness.

Q.—So that if a man had one of these arrangements in his house it would be a wash boiler until that apparatus was attached. It would just be a wash boiler up to the time he attached that apparatus at the top of it? A.—Yes, in that shape, without this goose-neck on that would

WANTS GREAT FUNDS TO FINANCE HOUSING

A. M. Bing Would Have Big Endowments Invested in Building Projects.

$3,500,000,000 IS AVAILABLE

Alexander M. Bing, President of the City Housing Corporation, addressing the annual dinner-meeting of the corporation last night at the Biltmore, urged that at least a part of the immense endowment funds for charitable, philanthropic and educational purposes, such as the Carnegie, Harkness and Rockefeller Foundations, be invested in limited dividend companies engaged on model housing projects and thus made to serve to double social purpose.

These funds, it was estimated by Mr. Bing, have reached the stupendous total of $3,500,000,000. The solution of the housing problem, he said, would receive a tremendous impetus if men of wealth in endowing foundations, colleges and hospitals would provide for such investment.

Private Funds Needed.

Together with former Supreme Court Justice Robert McC. Marsh, who also spoke, Mr. Bing emphasized that although the State through the legislation now pending would probably aid in a solution of the housing problem, it would supply no funds for the purpose, and that the required money must come from private sources, either through the purchase of bonds, or subscription to the stock of limited dividend companies.

The dinner marked the conclusion of the second year of the City Housing Corporation, the most active limited dividend company now engaged in developing a housing plan, which is developing the Sunnyside Gardens community in Queens. A report of the progress to date was made, and there was a discussion of the community problems that arise in a development like Sunnyside by Dr. John Lovejoy Elliott, head of the Hudson Guild. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt presided.

What would be in effect a "double-barreled" philanthropy was outlined by Mr. Bing in his address. The immense wealth he mentioned, he said, was held permanently for investment and only the interest or dividends used for the purposes for which the foundations were created. Under the circumstances, he said, the principal could be invested in housing enterprises to relieve the shortage of modern quarters for wage earners.

"In order to see what it would have meant if such an attitude had been taken in the past," he continued, "we have received from reliable sources information as to the total amounts of endowments at present in the hands of foundations, colleges, hospitals, and so on.

Sees $3,500,000,000 for Use.

"We have a record of $825,000,000 invested in the endowment of philanthropic and educational foundations, and in addition, $650,000,000 as endowment funds of colleges, and at least $3,000,000,000 in the endowments of churches, hospitals and other charitable institutions. This makes a total of $2,500,000,000 which by no means represents all of these funds, as no complete record exists. It is quite likely that an enumeration of all of these endowment funds would bring the total close to $3,500,000,000.

"I have no hesitation whatever in saying that if there were available for investment for these purposes only 5 or 10 per cent. of the funds at present invested for the benefit of these institutions, their use in limited dividend housing companies would effect a tremendous change in housing conditions all over the country, and the institutions for whose benefit the funds were set aside would continue to receive the income."

Reporting on the progress of Sunnyside, Mr. Bing said by the time the development was completed, within a little over two years, there would be accommodations for about 1,250 families, or nearly 5,000 people. Inquiries had come in from twenty-eight States outside of New York concerning the nature of the work and methods of procedure, he said, and from many foreign countries.

There were at present 302 stockholders, he said, with a total stock subscription of more than $1,700,000. Every year they hoped to increase the subscriptions by at least $1,000,000. In order to make proper progress, a considerably larger amount than this would be desirable.

COMMUNIST MENACES YOUNG BRITISH PEER

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 14.—George John Patrick Dominic Townshend, seventh marquess and twelfth baronet of that name, is being as closely guarded today as royalty.

Guards accompany him wherever he goes, guards lurk in the background when he amuses himself and guards are within call when he is asleep.

Probably one of the few people in England who are unaware of this fact is George John Patrick Dominic Townshend himself, for he is only 10 years old.

A series of mysterious letters, threatening to kidnap the marquess and hold him for a £5,000 ransom, are the reasons why he is so closely watched. The letters, all of which are signed "British Communist," are thought to have been written by a person who is well educated but deranged.

The latest communication said:

"If the sum of £5,000 is not paid to any institution you might wish to name I will in due course remove your son and hold him until my condition is complied with."

Scotland Yard detectives are inquiring in London in the hope of discovering the writer of the letters.

The marquess, who is described as a "jolly little chap," might be able to take care of himself. Despite his tender age he exchanged punches in sparring for a charity match at the National Sporting Club in January of last year with an opponent two weeks older than himself.

German Centrists Back Prohibition Move; Join Socialists in Urging Liquor Law Reform

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, April 14.—John Barleycorn is recognized as a growing evil in Germany by the Catholic Centrists, forming the third largest party, who are joining forces with the Socialist Party, which has the largest Reichstag faction.

While not going so far as to advocate nationwide prohibition, or even local option interpreted as it was in America in pre-Volstead days, the Centrists urge complete reform of the State license system and nationwide legislation against the evil effects of unlimited liquor, according to Dr. Heinrich Krone, Reichstag Deputy. Within three weeks bills will be introduced into the German Reichstag which are forerunners for prohibition and the result of the present dry movement.

Though only occasional references are made openly to the local option movement or the efforts to control the alcohol traffic, it is learned that there is a well-organized machine, oiled and superintended by Americans, which secretly has gained the necessary political strength to bring the fight into the open.

"Prohibition is not for the best interest of our people," Dr. Krone said. "For that reason legislation giving local option to the people should contain restrictions against the complete barring of all alcohol."

Against this the dry agents have uttered no protest, being content to gain an inch at a step.

Dr. Krone, speaking for the Centrists, says they are unanimous in the opinion that the license laws should undergo radical changes and that legislation is necessary to protect the nation from excessive drinking. However, there are numerous opinions within the party as to just what local option means and to what extent it should be allowed to control the use of alcohol.

Dr. Krone warns his party against taking news from either wets or drys in America as gospel concerning the effect of prohibition in that country, saying both sides handle the truth carelessly.

Local option in Germany is "Gemeindebestimungsrecht," which on account of man's mortality is shortened to "Gbr."

In the Reichstag elections of December, 1924, the Socialists seated 130 Deputies and the Catholic Centrists 67 out of a total of 490. In the election for President in the following March, out of a total vote of about 27,000,000, the Socialists polled nearly 8,000,000 and the Catholic Centrists 4,061,593.

MORE ALCOHOLIC PATIENTS.

Increase 7.6 Per Cent. in First Admissions to State Hospitals.

ALBANY, April 14 (AP).—Dr. Horatio M. Pollock, director of the State Hospital Commission's Bureau of Statistics, stated today that alcohol was the causative factor in 7.6 per cent. of first admissions to the State hospitals in the year ended last June. The percentage, Dr. Pollock said, was nearly double that of similar cases in 1919, the year before the prohibition law became operative, when it was 4 per cent.

"Again our reports show," Dr. C. Floyd Haviland, Chairman of the commission, explained, "that for decades before prohibition there was a well-defined trend downward in first admissions with alcoholic psychoses, with the exception of the year the United States entered the World War, which exception, I believe, may be attributed to war excitement. In 1909 the per cent of first admissions with alcoholic psychoses was 10.8. The decrease was gradual, the exception already noted, until 1919, when the percentage was 4.

"In 1920, the first year prohibition was operative, the percentage of alcoholic first admission was 1.9 per cent. This was the lowest for sixteen years. Since 1920 the percentage of increases has been well defined and constant. In 1921 it was 2.8 per cent.; 1922, 3.2 per cent.; 1923, 4 per cent.; 1924, 5.4 per cent., and 1925, 6 per cent.

New alcoholic mental disease cases increased from 373 in 1924 to 422 in 1925, the report disclosed. Alcohol, the report added, appeared as a factor in 11.2 per cent. of the male cases and in 3.1 per cent. of the female.

METAL CRAFTSMEN STRIKE.

Union Says 4,000 Have Quit in Small Shops—Employers Deny It.

A strike has been called of members of the Architectural Iron, Bronze and Structural Workers' Union on questions of wages, hours and the open shop, it was announced yesterday at union headquarters, 23 Union Square.

The members of the craft are employed altogether on shop work, many of them in small shops in the Bronx and Brownsville. While union representatives asserted that about 4,000 helpers and mechanics went out, Walter J. Landolt, Secretary of the Allied Building Metal Industry, members of which employ about 2,200, said that out of that number only 150 had quit.

The strikers ask an increase of 10 cents an hour and a forty-four-hour week. Helpers, it was said, now earn $33 a week and mechanics $44 a week. The building trades have not been affected materially by the strike, it was said.

The shadow over the happiness of Edward W. Browning and the 15-year-old girl he married last Saturday at Cold Spring was lifted yesterday in an announcement by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The society had instituted proceedings in the Children's Court to have Mrs. Catherine Heenan, mother of the bride, displaced as guardian.

Colonel Ernest K. Coulter, general manager of the society, said that a certified copy of the marriage documents had been obtained by an agent of the organization at Cold Spring. The copy was handed to presiding Judge Franklin Chase Hoyt of the Children's Court yesterday. The documents showed that the girl had obtained the consent of her parents to the marriage.

Case to Be Dismissed.

This step, said Colonel Coulter, barred any further action by the society. The hearing, which was scheduled for 10 A. M. today, will consist merely of a dismissal of the proceeding.

Browning and his wife motored into town yesterday, he to appear in the Municipal Court in West 125th Street in an action involving a dispute over some of his realty, and she to have her neck, badly burned by acid thrown by an unidentified person before the marriage, dressed at the Fifth Avenue Hospital, Fifth Avenue and 105th Street.

"It was the only proper thing to do," she said, when told of the dropping of the proceedings against her mother. Browning refused to talk, saying, "I am going to let my wife do all the talking."

Late last night Mr. and Mrs. Browning left their Cold Spring home, and it was reported that they would drive to Canada. Soon before his departure The Cold Spring Recorder published a statement from Mr. Browning.

In the statement Mr. Browning said he had preserved "a dignified silence" because he had been misquoted very frequently. He said that his tastes were "essentially domestic," and that his "greatest ambition" was to "possess and preside over a happy home and family." In search of this end, he said, he and his wife were seeking a country estate in Putnam County.

Calls It Love at First Sight.

After the "unfortunate outcome" of his first marriage, said Mr. Browning, his hopes for a happy family life were shattered for a time, but later he considered another marriage.

"The idea grew upon me with the advent of Spring," he is quoted as saying. "I went forth with all the ardor of youth and met Frances Heenan. It was a real case of love at first sight."

His courtship and his wedding he characterized as "beautiful and romantic." The wedding, he said, was hastened because of "unwelcome publicity." He declared that as soon as his bride had recovered from her injuries they would start on a honeymoon trip.

"It is not considered good taste or discretion to disclose the destination," he says, and concludes: "What will happen after our return—who knows?"

DODD URGES LIFE TERM IN FIRST DEGREE THEFT

We Must Eliminate Guns to Curb Crime, He Says—Lays 75 Per Cent. to Youths Under 25.

Charles J. Dodd, District Attorney of Kings County, who addressed the fifteenth annual dinner of the New York Flour Club at the Waldorf last night, advocated life imprisonment for those convicted of first degree robbery and burglary on the ground that such law-breakers were potential murderers.

Describing crime conditions in Brooklyn and elsewhere, Mr. Dodd said 75 per cent. of those guilty of felonies in Kings County during recent years were men and boys under 25 years of age. Mr. Dodd blamed the gun for most crimes.

"Although we have the Sullivan law," he said, "guns can be purchased by the mail-order route, or they can be bought in New Jersey. We must eliminate the shooting iron that fits the pocket to rid our communities of theft and murder."

Another reason for wholesale robbery, in the opinion of Mr. Dodd, was the fact that thieves could not turn evidence against the receivers of their stolen goods. The Brooklyn District Attorney asked revision of the statutes to remove this difficulty.

Speaking in glowing terms of the age in which we live, Mr. Somers admitted the spread of crime, the failure of many churches, and the chaos recorded by the front pages of the newspapers. But, he added, we must remember that population has increased so swiftly in our century that the relative percentage of evil is not so alarming.

Mr. Somers said he looked to the United States, England and Germany for world leadership.

R. L. Sweet, President of the New York Flour Club, presided.

Aetna Most Thickly Populated Area.

CATANIA, Sicily, April 14 (AP).—The slopes of Mount Aetna, famous volcano, are more thickly populated than any other region in the world, according to surveyors of the Vulcanological Institute of the university here. On each of the 800 habitable square miles an average of 800 persons are living.

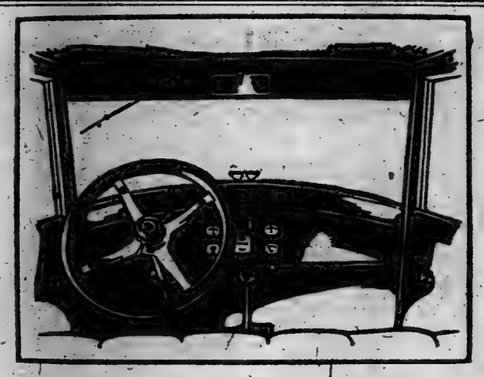
Safety demands clear vision



In the Hupmobile Six, with its narrow pillars—the result of its new composite steel-and-wood-body construction—vision ahead is improved 40 per cent over less modern construction.

A thick, broad front pillar can completely hide an object even as bulky as another motor car, as the left hand diagram shows.

And, as the right hand diagram shows, the slender Hupmobile pillar permits the driver to see the same car, at the same distance, in plenty of time.

That is safety vision—and it is but one of the superior features which you always associate with Hupmobile history and reputation.

Outstanding by reason of these definite superiorities—summed up in its wonderful performance, its beauty, its demonstrated economy—the Hupmobile Six is winning thousands away from the higher priced, as well as the lower priced, sixes.

NIGHT BOMBARDING GOES ON AT PEKING

THE DEADLOCK CONTINUES

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PEKING, April 14.—Passengers and mail motor traffic with Tientsin still is impossible. Foreign travelers who endeavored to get through yesterday and today were heavily fired upon, but escaped injury.

The bombardment along the front from east to south has continued intermittently through the last forty-eight hours and again airplanes dropped bombs yesterday and today.

Despite the solemn treaties with the leading powers, railway communication between Peking and the sea is totally non-existent and has been for several weeks, while ingress and egress for passengers and mails by road has become so dangerous as to be impracticable.

Apparently the Kuominchun is strong enough to hold off the Fengtien and Shantung forces, who are pressing toward Peking from the east and the southeast, and the Kuominchun in the meantime is parleying with the Wu-Pei-fu forces now established at Paoting-fu, ninety miles south of Peking, but with advanced detachments posted within ten miles west of Peking. The stalemate is expected to continue until Wu-Pei-fu moves decisively.

The head of the State and the Prime Minister still are refugees in the Legation Quarter and issue harmless pronouncements to the nation. As there is no government the city virtually is under martial law.

The artillery bombardment on the south front is unusually heavy and distinct tonight, and suggests the possibility of an advance.

Chang's Cossacks Defeated.

Copyright, 1926, by The Chicago Tribune Co.

PEKING, April 14.—Russian captives on the southeast front are reported to be led, like camels with a string through their noses when they are taken to the rear. The Cossacks who formed a brigade under General Chang Tso-lin almost have been annihilated as a result of resistance to the Kuominchun (National Armies).

The fighting there is almost continuous, with airplanes bombing the trenches. One airplane has failed to return.

The fighting south of Tungchow also is heavy.

General Chang today replied to the overtures of the peace delegation that he will cease fighting when the Kuominchun evacuates Peking, but that he will not enter the capital if the police preserve order.

BRINDELL NO BETTER.

Ex-Building Trades "Czar" Still Seriously Ill in His Home.

Seriously ill for several months, Robert P. Brindell, dethroned leader of the building trades of New York, who was sent to Sing Sing Prison for extortion, was in no better condition last night at his home at 1,890 Daly Avenue, the Bronx, according to members of his family.

Reports that Brindell was suffering from tuberculosis were denied, but the nature of his malady was not made known. Members of the family said that while Brindell's condition was "very serious," they expected him to recover.

DULL McCOOEY'S APPETITE.

Kings Assemblymen Invite Him to Breakfast, Complain of Treatment.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 14.—Democratic Assemblymen from Brooklyn took advantage today of the presence at the capital of John H. McCooey, leader of the Democratic forces in Kings, to call his attention to the fact that they were being neglected in court patronage in their home county.

They told him that it was his duty and within his domain to see that they received their just share of references, guardianships and other choice pieces of patronage within the bestowal of the courts. As things were, they complained, the good jobs were being handed out to friends of Mr. McCooey and of the district leaders in Kings, with no consideration for hard-working members of the Assembly who are members also of the legal profession.

The complaint was registered with the Brooklyn chieftain at a breakfast to which they had invited him. What brought Mr. McCooey to the capital was last night's dinner for Senator Downing.

For a while all sorts of constructions were placed on the meeting of Mr. McCooey and the leaders. A subject on which comment was made before the object of the breakfast invitation became known was the absence of three Democratic Senators from Kings who had sided against Mr. McCooey and favored the nomination of Mayor Walker in the primaries last Autumn.

Mr. McCooey told the Assemblymen that the latch string was always out and that if they had any complaints or petitions he was always ready to give them a hearing. He started for New York on an early afternoon train.

WOULD QUIT HEALTH BOARD.

McLaughlin Sees No Reason Why Police Head Should Serve There.

Police Commissioner McLaughlin said yesterday that he could see no reason why he should be forced under the law to act as ex-officio member of the Board of Health.

"The Police Commissioner has no business there," he declared. "I have implicit faith in Dr. Louis I. Harris, the President of the Board of Health, and I can't see why the Police Commissioner should be on that board."

Patrolmen who have been on the force fifteen years or more were requested yesterday in a general order by the Commissioner to apply to him for assignment to the sanitary squad of the Health Department.

"There is room only for fifty men," Commissioner McLaughlin said. "These are easy assignments and I feel that the older men should get them."

STRATON SILENT ON ROW.

Pastor Has Nothing to Say About Resignation of Four Trustees.

The Rev. Dr. John Roach Straton returned to New York yesterday afternoon, and last evening he conducted the Wednesday night prayer meeting in Calvary Baptist Church. He was asked whether he would make any statement regarding the resignation of four members of the Board of Trustees of the church because they could not agree with his policies or approve payment of salary to him while filling the pulpit of a Florida church.

"I have nothing to say," said Dr. Straton, and then, as he waved his hand in the direction of his departing congregation, added: "There is Calvary Church. There is the answer."

Binghamton Girls Held in Washington.

WASHINGTON, April 14 (AP).—Three girls from Binghamton, N. Y., who said they were on their way to Florida despite scanty funds, were held by police today as fugitives from their parents. They gave their names as Wilma Ager, 16; Dolores Wilburt, 15, and Madelyn Karns, 17.

F. J. ARNOLD ELECTED DISTRICT SCHOOL CHIEF

The Board of Education unanimously elected yesterday Frank J. Arnold, principal of Public School 118, Brooklyn, a District Superintendent to succeed Cornelius D. Fleming, retired. His nomination had been recommended by the Board of Superintendents. Mr. Arnold has taught in the high and elementary schools of this city for more than 25 years. He is a graduate of St. Lawrence University.

Mr. Arnold is executive secretary of the Brooklyn Teachers' Association. He is chairman of the special committee appointed to draft a character training course of study for the schools.

The Board awarded contracts for construction of a new school in Queens and one in Richmond and recommended the erection of a new school at Mace and Colden Avenues, the Bronx. The school in Queens will be on Wildey Avenue, Hollis and the Richmond School at Mariner's Harbor.

A request for a $500,000 appropriation for fire prevention work on schools in all boroughs was referred back to President George J. Ryan, with power to act.

The suspension of Dr. James P. Hunt from the position of medical examiner on charges of neglect of duty was referred to the Law Committee.

A letter from Governor Smith praising the "public spirit and loyal cooperation" of President Ryan, who served as Vice Chairman of the Governor's Commission on School and Finance Administration, was read.

Traffic Clubs to Protest to Congress —Webster Made President.

DALLAS, Texas, April 14 (AP).—The national convention of the Associated Traffic Clubs of America adjourned here today after adopting a resolution calling upon its officers to protest to Congress against what it termed fixing railroad rates through political influence.

Another resolution urged some form of settlement of railroad labor disputes by conferences between the roads and their employes.

T. T. Webster of Dayton, Ohio, was elected President, succeeding Henry A. Palmer of Chicago. F. A. Doebber of Indianapolis was elected Secretary, and W. T. Vandenburgh of Louisville, Treasurer.

WOMAN AUTOIST IS INJURED.

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla., April 14 (AP).—Mme. Joan La Costa, claimant of the women's world's championship automobile race drivers' title, was slightly injured and burned in jumping from her automobile when it caught fire while making a practice run on the beach here today.

Mme. La Costa steered her machine into the ocean when the gasoline tank exploded. She was taken from the water by a bystander. It was believed the automobile was traveling more than 100 miles an hour when the explosion occurred.

Today's practice spins were made by Mme. La Costa in preparation for a series of trials to establish new feminine world speed records.

FRANCO-GERMAN AIR ACCORD

Free Passage of Planes Over Both Countries Agreed To.

PARIS, April 14 (AP).—German and French airplanes now may fly over French and German territory respectively by reason of the Franco-German air convention signed here today.

The agreement abolishes the existing reciprocal ban on aircraft of one country flying over territory of the other nation and thus permits the opening of new direct air lines between London, Paris and Berlin and other German cities, and to Copenhagen and Moscow by way of Germany.

Rapid travel facilities in Europe have been greatly enhanced by the convention. Plans to extend Europe's air lines had been made in anticipation of the signature of the compact and the new lines will begin regular operation in June.

ILL WIFE LEAPS TO DEATH.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 14.—Despondent because of ill health, Mrs. Irene Flack, 25 years old, of 328 Livingston Avenue, Lyndhurst, N. J., wife of an attorney, killed herself here today by leaping from her room in the Breakers Hotel to a concrete areaway three floors below.

Crazed with grief, her husband, J. C. Flack, 35, attempted twice to jump from a fire-escape leading from a room on the third floor of the Atlantic City Hospital, where his wife's body lay. He finally was taken to the detention room at Police Headquarters, where he is held for observation.

Mr. and Mrs. Flack came to the shore yesterday. The wife had been ill and it was hoped she would recuperate here. According to the police, she had twice before attempted to kill herself.

Mr. Flack has a 5-year-old son, who is now with relatives at Lyndhurst.

LIPTON ON RADIO SAYS HE'S AFTER THAT CUP

Yachtsman Tells Listeners He Won't Rest Till He Gets It—Praises Our Commerce.

That Sir Thomas Lipton will soon challenge America to another yacht race was asserted in his radio address last night from Station WOR at 1,440 Broadway. He said:

"I confess I have designs on one of your national treasures, a thing of no great intrinsic value, but which is rightly regarded by the people as of national importance. I will not rest until I have succeeded in capturing the famous old mug, recognized as the blue ribbon prize of the sea and generally known as America's Cup."

Sir Thomas ruefully reminded his hearers that America has had the cup for nearly seventy-five years.

"I think," he said, "a visit to the old country, however short its stay, would do it no harm. We could at least make some use of it over there, and in the way it was intended to be used, namely, to put something in it."

"Every time I come over here I am more and more astonished at the many signs of material progress, the striking indications of the general prosperity of the people. This was brought to my notice particularly only yesterday, when, in passing through a town which I was informed was purely an industrial or working class community, I noticed how very nicely the school children were dressed. This pleased me very much, as it not only indicated prosperity and well-to-do condition of the parents, but showed the care which they give to their children and the interest they take in their appearance."

Sir Thomas said he had never seen in any city or country in the world better dressed people than those in the streets of New York.

COOLIDGE PLANS UNCERTAIN

WASHINGTON, April 14 (AP).—President Coolidge, who intends to pass up Swampscott, Mass., this Summer for an inland vacation retreat, has not decided where he will go or when he will be able to get away from Washington.

Invitations have been received by the President to establish a Summer White House in various sections of the country, and he is having several of them investigated to get an accurate line on their good points and possible drawbacks. He has indicated he would like to go to the mountains.

Unless he selects a place easily accessible to Philadelphia, it is improbable that Mr. Coolidge will start on his vacation until after his July 5 address at the Sesquicentennial Exposition.

He plans to address the semi-annual budget meeting here late in June, as he did last year just before going to the Massachusetts shore.

Is Mussolini Building a New Italian Empire?

Mussolini, the Italian dictator, is trying to form an anti-German bloc of Italy and the Balkan States, it is charged by some German writers, and the chief purpose of this bloc would be to prevent the union of Austria and Germany.

There is probably no man living to-day who is causing more concern to the chancelleries throughout the world than Mussolini. He has been charged with having the ambitions of Caesar, and to fulfil his ambitions he would stop at nothing — so say his enemies.

That he has Jugo-Slavia's support is obvious, we are told, from the recently concluded treaty between Italy and Jugo-Slavia. What is more, according to a special correspondent of the London Westminster Gazette, Mussolini's object in all the combinations he is engineering in Jugo-Slavia, Greece, and other South and Central European nations, is to obtain at least the benevolent neutrality of his neighbors in connection with his great "Empire" projects in the Middle East.

A leading article in THE LITERARY DIGEST this week, in text and picture, gives an illuminating insight into the political turmoil in Europe. It brings out in sharp contrast all the opposing elements so that the average man will understand the situation clearly.

CITES CAESAR'S 'AD' FOR BELGIAN GOODS

STILL MAKING THEM WELL

Baron de Cartier de Marchienne, Belgian Ambassador to the United States, made a plea to American exporters at the weekly luncheon yesterday of the Advertising Club, 23 Park Avenue, to use Belgium as their distributing point for Europe.

"By establishing a stock of merchandise at Antwerp," said the Ambassador, "the American exporter would find himself not only 'on all fours' with his European competitor, but would in many cases have the advantage of him on account of the central location of Antwerp, and its close connections, by rail and water, with an extensive and highly industrialized, as well as rich agricultural hinterland.

"We can offer you special inducement in the nature of cheap storage facilities and exemption from customs duties for goods destined for re-export to other countries."

The Belgians are good business men, and know a good thing when they see it, he continued. He reminded his audience that a compatriot of his, Peter Minuit, a Walloon, purchased the island of Manhattan from the Indians just about 300 years ago for about $24.

"It is considered one of the best bargains in history," he remarked, "and I am proud to think that it was one of my countrymen who gave your city its first start in life.

Belgians received their first real publicity and some "very handsome free advertising," he went on, following the visit in ancient times of Julius Caesar, in his "best seller," the "De Bello Gallico." Not only did Belgian manufactured articles, such as textiles, cloth, linen and pottery, become in high favor in the capital of the Caesars, but they manufactured and exported a special make of "car" which was in great demand among the Romans, especially for occasions of pomp and show and as racing chariots.

"These light two-wheeled chariots," the Ambassador explained, "were known as "Belgica Esseda," and they were given free advertising by the poet Virgil in his Georgics more than a quarter of a century before the beginning of the Christian era. And the Belgians have kept up their reputation as manufacturers of good cars."

The Ambassador then dwelt on Antwerp, which he described as the third port of the world, with over 20,000,000 tons of shipping entering its port last year. He said the city had a strong attraction for tourists, and all those who love painting, music, architecture and history.

Charles C. Green, President of the club, presided. Louis Wiley paid a tribute to the Ambassador's long and distinguished diplomatic career in this country. Others at the speakers' table were J. T. Johnston Mali, Consul for Belgium in New York; J. F. Stillemans, Director of the Belgian Bureau; Professor Henry G. Bayer of New York University, Paul Meyer, Louis Birnbaum, J. Bonneswyn, Leon Danley, William Gets, P. V. G. Mitchell, Albert Tyck and H. H. Charles.

5 YALE DEPARTMENTS TO DO PERSONNEL WORK

Will Give Courses to Acquaint Students With Problems of Industrial Management.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, April 14.—Five Yale departments today announced that they have begun a cooperative policy in personnel management, in accordance with the new plan of applying personnel principles in organization methods.

The first step was to subject undergraduates to a personnel questionnaire which is now going on. Now the departments of government, applied physiology, industrial engineering, divinity school and the bureau of appointments have been placed under the procedure.

Courses on the background of personnel work will be given by Professors Edgar S. Furniss and Jerome Davis, covering labor problems, Socialism, social reform, and the ethical aspects of labor problems. Professor Hudson B. Hastings will teach personnel management while a course in industrial physiology will be given by Dr. Howard W. Haggard. These will train students in the problems of industrial executives.

A report made today stated that the plan is to acquaint students with the numerous phases of personnel activity and to stimulate interest by presenting specific policies followed by industrial concerns.

In addition the first student branch of the American Management Association has been organized. The report adds:

"The course of industrial physiology has been developed because we believe that the health of the worker and the adaption of his job to his physical capacities is a problem of sufficient economic and social importance to warrant study. In preparation for research work in personnel management the Sheffield Scientific School has inaugurated a plan of rating the students on fifteen qualities of character, and collecting complete information concerning the students' activities.

"On seven of the qualities, character ratings of fellow students will be obtained in addition to the ratings given by the faculty. It is expected that these ratings will very materially assist the students in the self-development of character, as they will consult their division officers about them."

Tarantula Kills Connecticut Man.

PUTNAM, Conn., April 14 (AP).—The bite of a tarantula, received while he was turning a bunch of bananas in a fruit store in Webster last Thursday, proved fatal to Oscar O. Lynch, 45, of North Grosvenordale, a mill worker. He died at night after having suffered intense agony for several days. After the spider bit him Lynch went back to North Grosvendale before seeing a doctor. His arm began to swell the next day and specialists were called. Attending physicians said his death was the result of the tarantula's bite.

COCAINE USED MOST BY DRUG ADDICTS

WORKHOUSE SURVEY MADE

Sixty Per Cent. of Inmates in 1925 Were Sent There In Connection With Drug Traffic.

Acting Captain Henry Scherb, head of the Narcotic Division of the Police Department, made public yesterday a report by Gerhard Kuhne, Chief of the Division of Criminal Records of the Department of Correction, which showed that 60 per cent. of the persons committed to the workhouse on Welfare Island in 1925 were drug addicts or in some manner connected with the illicit traffic in narcotics in this city.

Most of the addicts use cocaine, the report said, and Captain Scherb added that police experience with criminals had revealed that cocaine was the drug usually taken by gunmen to stimulate courage. The report showed that of the 1,490 persons sent to the island in connection with the drug traffic 927 had been convicted of possessing or selling narcotics and 563 were sent there for treatment. Of these, forty women and 389 men had requested that they be committed to the institution in an effort to be cured of the habit.

Mr. Kuhne reported that 737 at the workhouse were recognized as persons who had previously been sent there for treatment for drug addiction, and that some of them had been committed as many as fifteen times for the offense. More than 70 per cent. of those admitted had previous records, the report continued, the ratio being 68 per cent for the men and 78 per cent. for the women.

The cost of providing 'reatment for 901 cases was $270,300. In this connection the report said that there was no means of determining how much had been spent by these addicts in trying to rid themselves of the drug habit before their commitment. Some of the self-committed addicts, it was found, had served sentences for offenses other than those connected with the drug traffic. Of 574 offenders committed for selling or possessing narcotics, 255 had served previous sentences for the same offense.

Among the illicit drug dispensers were 155 who previously had received the drug cure at the institution at an approximate cost to the city of $69,600.

WAITER, ON STAND, SAYS HE KILLED EMPLOYERS

Testifies Liquor Was Served in Freeport (L. I.) Roadhouse—Gives His Reason for Shooting.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., April 14.—Karl Kieferle, a waiter in a Freeport roadhouse, on trial in the Nassau County Court on the charge of killing his employers, Henry Koethe and Mrs. Nellie Watson on April 6, took the stand in his own defense today. He said he shot Koethe and Mrs. Watson because they wanted him to "play chambermaid to a house dog."

That was the last straw, he said, that made him go and get a pistol and shoot them. He said his employers also demanded that he overcharge customers who ordered drinks.

Kieferle testified that many county officials and prohibition agents visited the roadhouse and were always served with liquor without charge. Other customers, he said, were refined people who never caused trouble, and the only person he saw ejected in the three weeks he worked there was a drunken policeman.

Kieferle said his employer, Koethe, told him that he, (Koethe) had formerly served in the prohibition enforcement service to find out who could be bought and who could not. He said Koethe had frequently referred in derogatory terms to the prohibition agents who frequented the place, and said he had them in his power.

The first meeting in the campaign to raise $15,000,000 for the pensioning of aged ministers of the Presbyterian Church will be held on April 21 at the Bankers' Club, according to an announcement made yesterday by Will H. Hays, who is Chairman of the Layman's Committee.

Secretary Mellon and his brother are expected to attend. The Rev. Dr. Charles R. Erdman, Moderator of the General Assembly, will be the principal speaker. Other speakers will be Senator William B. McKinley of Illinois and Dr. Henry B. Master of Philadelphia.

GIRL AND BOY MISSING.

Sister, 18, Takes Brother, 4, Fearing to Be Sent to Institution.

The Missing Persons Bureau was asked yesterday to search for Anna Ruggiero, 18 years old, and her brother Antonio, 4, who disappeared from the home of their aunt, Mrs. Gertrude Cafiero, at 4,321 Barnes Avenue, the Bronx, on Tuesday afternoon.

The girl and the boy, with six brothers and sisters, had been living with Mrs. Cafiero since their mother was taken to the Metropolitan Hospital on Welfare Island about three weeks ago. Their father died several years ago. Mrs. Cafiero has six children of her own, and the influx of the Ruggiero children, of whom Anna was the eldest, proved too much for her.

On Monday social workers called to make arrangements for putting Anna and some of the others in a charitable institution. Anna learned about the plan and departed with Antonio, her youngest brother.

A general alarm was sent out from Brooklyn Police Headquarters for Benjamin Gabrowitz, a cripple, who has been missing from his home at 27 Siegel Street, Brooklyn, since Monday.

The BILLIONAREA

in the GREATER ST. LOUIS MARKET

"What is happening in St. Louis that causes so much talk about it as a rich market? Is it booming?... and if so . . . what is the cause of it?. . . and will it last?"

GREATER ST. LOUIS is probably the most talked of major market in America today—and it deserves to be. Trade statistics show that the Metropolitan area of St. Louis has an annual Purchasing Power of more than a Billion Dollars. It is a veritable "BILLIONAREA."

Naturally, there is a keen and growing interest in such a prosperous market among national advertisers, merchandisers and manufacturers, and a desire to know more about it. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch, therefore, will outline in a series of articles the underlying reasons for the richness and unusual development of this market—formerly more noted for solidity than for speed of growth.

The recent great development of the Greater St. Louis Market is not a boom in any sense of the word save that of speed of growth. This rapid progress is based on new conditions and on long existing factors that have been crystallizing for years in the minds of national industries.

Always a prosperous field for national advertisers and manufacturers, the Greater St. Louis Market can now be properly termed "The BILLIONAREA," because of its recent and unusual business development and solid prosperity.

This solid yet rapid development is making the Greater St. Louis Market most opportune for profitable advertising and selling.

The laws of sound selling and sound advertising—just as with sound military tactics—point to the logic of concentrating and pushing the hardest where resistance is least, and where the greatest results can be secured from the effort put forth.

The value of a market is not simply the number of people in it—because neither the number nor the needs or desires of people indicate their worth as purchasers. An equal population of a Russian city, for example, may have more needs and desires, but lack the Means to Buy.

Because of these fundamental facts, every national advertiser will recognize the tremendous purchasing power concentrated in the Greater St. Louis Market, when he learns that its extra buying power per family, over the national average, is greater than any other market in America, with one exception.

The dominant newspaper, having the largest circulation in the Greater St. Louis Market and carrying by far the greatest volume of advertising is the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

P+D+C

The Advertiser's Micrometer of a Newspaper

The very principles that have been long recognized as fundamental in the analysis of any market are, for exactly the same reasons, fundamental in the analysis of a newspaper's market. Those principles are the relation of

Population

Coverage

For the convenience of national advertisers, the St. Louis Post Dispatch has published a P+D+C Manual which describes the fundamental principles of measuring a market from the standpoint of newspaper advertising by identically the same accepted standards that have long been used in measuring a market from the standpoint of selling.

The Post-Dispatch has also just completed a Book of Information About St. Louis and "The BILLIONAREA"—the Greater St. Louis Market, that will be of inestimable value to any advertiser.

ST. LOUIS

POST-DISPATCH

The highest ranking P+D+C newspaper of "The BILLIONAREA"—the Greater St. Louis Market

Because the St. Louis Post-Dispatch has the greatest circulation in this rich area, it offers national advertisers a P+D+C value almost without parallel in America.

It reaches more People with more Dollars with a greater Coverage of "The Billionarea" than any other newspaper.

Its coverage is so complete that this one newspaper alone taps the unusual buying power of practically every home in the Greater St. Louis Market.

The fact that both local and national advertisers recognize the Post-Dispatch as the most powerful selling force in the Greater St. Louis Market is proved by its volume of advertising—almost equal to that of all other St. Louis newspapers combined.

SOVIET INVITES PRIVATE CAPITAL

It Is Sought to Run Factories and Pay Royalties to State so as to Increase Production.

GOODS FAMINE IS ACUTE

By WALTER DURANTY.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MOSCOW, April 14.—Russia is now passing through a sharp economic and financial crisis, but it is asserted here that this is rather a sign of national growth and reconstruction rather than the disaster it is called by hostile critics abroad.

While beyond a doubt there was excessive optimism last Summer and miscalculation as to the amount of grain available for export, the fact remains that industrial production increased 64 per cent. last year and will be 30 to 40 per cent. greater this year.

Agricultural production has improved at even a swifter rate, and if weather conditions are favorable the coming harvest should approach the pre-war average.

But this rapid growth produced the natural result in a country operating on an extremely slender financial margin—demand for industrial credits on the one hand and for manufactured goods on the other so far outstripped the supply that factories were shutting down for lack of capital and raw material. At the same time there was a veritable famine of the goods they should be producing.

Soviet officials point with pride to the price lists of the State stores and cooperatives, showing only a trifling increase in the past six months. But it is often said goods are missing from the shelves, or are only to be purchased after waiting in line for two or three hours, while their immediate purchase in private stores will cost 60 or 100 per cent. higher.

Reasons for Weak Currency.

Likewise, State banks still insist on gold parity for the Soviet ruble, but in reality it is a discount of 10 to 25 per cent. This is not due to the weakness of the Soviet currency itself—on the contrary, there has been no new issue in the past four months and actual reductions are coming in six months—but simply, officials say, because the purchasing power of money decreases as goods become scarcer. Just how a way out of the difficulty is to be found still is undetermined.

Obviously, the easiest way would be new financial resources in the shape of credits either of cash or goods from abroad. But these the Soviet Government cannot receive in sufficient quantity until it makes certain concessions with regard to the Czarist Russian debt and compensation to foreigners for losses during the Revolution, which at present it is unwilling to admit.

Failing such credits Soviet authorities are doing the best they can by rigidly reducing expenditures in every direction. There are offices here in Moscow where 30 per cent. of the employes have been dismissed overnight. Throughout the country overhead is being cut to a minimum and a ruthless war is being waged against "bureaucracy of State industry and business."

This very bureaucracy has been the reason why the rest of the world never has been able to believe in the success of State—that is Socialist—enterprise as compared with private initiative, and it is rather refreshing to see that Russia, which is the country of State Socialism par excellence, now realizes the same thing.

Turning to Private Enterprise.

So far is this realized here that one of the plans to remedy the present goods famine is an extension of private enterprise in "light" industry—that is, all branches that have metallurgy, mining, transportation and lumber.

An appeal is now being made to private Russian and foreign capital to take over factories—except textile—and run them on a royalty basis for the State.

By this means, and by cutting down overhead, it is hoped to weather the crisis, but no one here imagines that the problem is easy or rapid of solution.

On the other hand, any suggestion of a counter-revolution or of internal trouble is baseless. It comes actually to this—if the Soviet Government obtains foreign credits the reconstruction of Russian economy will proceed quickly and smoothly. Without credits they will worry through nevertheless, but at the price of vast delay, vast effort and vast inconvenience for the mass of the population.

JERSEY MOTOR CZAR NEVER DROVE AN AUTO

What Is More, Commissioner Dill Says, He Never Will Drive One—Wants Citizens' Trust.

TRENTON, N. J., April 14 (AP).—"I have never driven a car, and never will as long as I live."

This statement was made today by Commissioner William L. Dill, who in the last eleven years, as head of the Motor Vehicle Department, has authorized the issuance of about 3,500,000 licenses.

On occasions when he uses an automobile it is operated either by an inspector or a member of his immediate family. This frequently handicaps him in his trips from Trenton to his home at Paterson, he said.

"My principal reason for not driving," Mr. Dill declared, "is the fact that I am frequently called upon to pass judgment on the frailties of my fellowmen. To permit a defendant to turn from my presence with the thought that he had been penalized for a violation of the motor vehicle or traffic acts that the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles committed with impunity, would soon arouse a feeling of distrust in the integrity of the Commissioner, and take from us what we believe we now enjoy—the confidence of our citizenry."

Mr. Dill said that the distressing automobile accidents that came to his notice, and conscious of the dangers that lurk in the path or wake of an automobile, caused him to believe he was "temperamentally unfitted" to drive a car.

SEIZED AT NICE AS SPIES.

Two Frenchmen Accused of Being in Pay of a Neighboring Power.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 14.—Another spy sensation was sprung on France tonight with the arrest of two young Frenchmen, Georges Latapie and André Procope, at Nice by French Secret Service agents on the charge of being in the espionage service of a neighboring power, said to be Italy. Both were hurried to Paris and placed in the Santé Prison pending the result of the investigation now in progress.

The greatest secrecy is observed in connection with the case, but it is believed the two Frenchmen are merely secondary workers in what is described as a "vast spy organization working in France for a foreign nation." Documents found upon the prisoners show they were engaged in gathering information about the French naval base at Toulon and aviation bases on the Riviera. Numerous other arrests are expected.

According to the French newspapers naval and military developments by France on the Mediterranean have been a source of great interest to Italy, who, it is charged, has sent numerous secret agents into France to ascertain particulars.

The greatest precautions have been taken at all military naval establishments in the south of France, and no one is allowed to enter camps or base properties without the authorization of the Ministry of Marine.

FREE WOMAN IN CHECK CASE

Sheriff O. C. Howell started for St. Petersburg, Fla., yesterday with Albert Rosenthal, 26 years old, of 504 West 110th Street, and Elliott Jaffe, 20 years old, of 45 West Eighty-first Street, who were arrested here about two weeks ago on charges that they had defrauded the First National Bank of St. Petersburg of $5,000 through a worthless check.

Mrs. Della D. Berne, sister of Jaffe and wife of Dr. Luis P. Berne, a plastic surgeon of 353 West Eighty-fifth Street, who was arrested with the two men, was discharged by Magistrate Moses R. Ryttenberg when a detective said that no demand for her return had been received from the Governor of Florida. The detective said, however, that Mrs. Berne had agreed to return voluntarily to St. Petersburg to appear as a witness.

At a previous hearing it was alleged that the bank was defrauded of about $31,000 through spurious checks signed by Mrs. Berne.

FRANCE MAY SELL CABINET BUILDINGS

Plan to Group Five Ministries in Structures on Grounds of Military School.

AMERICAN FIRMS SOUNDED

First Outlay in Beautification of Paris on Revenue-Producing Basis Would Exceed $100,000,000.

PARIS, April 14 (AP).—American capital and American enterprise may participate in a large-scale plan for the regrouping of the different departments of the French Government in new buildings. The scheme includes the sale or lease of the structures housing various Ministries at present, so as to make them constant revenue producers.

The plan, an outgrowth of the work of the commission appointed some time ago to consider means of getting something out of the unproductive State property, involves the leasing or the rebuilding for rent of the Ministries of Justice, Interior, Education, Navy and War.

These departments of the Government would be housed in a new group of buildings to be erected on the grounds of the Military School, which would be so compressed as to liberate sufficient space for the erection of new and artistic structures on the Champ de Mars. The space would also be utilized to centralize in the neighborhood of the Eiffel Tower the now widely dispersed Government services which occupy some of the most valuable ground space in the capital.

The carrying out of the plan will involve an initial outlay of somewhere between $100,000,000 and $150,000,000, it is estimated by the technical authorities who have been consulted. Its realization would add another architectural jewel to Paris's fine collection and at the same time produce a large annual revenue to the State.

The plan has been considered with two alternative provisions—first, to lease the whole of the State's unproductive property in Paris to a company or consortium which would undertake itself to make the property productive, and, second, a system of regrouping and rebuilding by the State with the collaboration of private capital and technical enterprise.

Bankers and construction concerns in the United States have been consulted regarding the proposal, and the Minister of Public Works has approved the scheme. It remains to be seen whether it is possible to work it out with the assistance of foreign capital.

The plan is a revival of part of a vast project conceived by Baron Haussmann more than sixty years ago for the beautification of Paris, along with the building of new boulevards and the widening and extension of streets, with the purpose of giving the capital more air space and adding to its grace and beauty.

The commission which is considering how to utilize the State property has not yet made its final report, but it is understood it will find in favor of the sale of many of the barracks in and around the capital as well as of many buildings occupied by scattered Government services. The commission will recommend the compression of all these services to accord with the principle of a reduction in the number of Government employes and simplification of the governmental work.

MOBS OF RIOTERS FIGHT PARIS POLICE

Government Workers Demanding Higher Pay Ignore Ban on Parades—400 Arrested.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 14.—Ten policemen were injured, some seriously, and more than 400 arrests were made in the course of a series of demonstrations in the Place de l'Opéra and other congested centres of Paris by Government employes and railway workers at an hour when hundreds of thousands of persons were returning home from their offices this evening.

The Prefect of Police had forbidden all demonstrations or parades, but this did not discourage many of the more militant employes from trying to break through the police lines as a means of registering their demand for higher salaries.

Railway workers picked the going home hour of commuters and the Gare St. Lazare and the Gare du Nord were at one time crowded with thousands of demonstrators who fought with the police when the latter tried to disperse them. Two hundred arrests were made at the Gare St. Lazare alone, while at the Gare du Nord the police cleared out passengers as well as the demonstrators in order to put down the disturbance there.

The centre of Paris took on a rather menacing appearance late this afternoon when thousands of police both afoot and on horseback augmented by the Republican Guard took up positions in the streets leading to the Place de l'Opéra where the public servants threatened to hold their protest meeting. The demonstrators complained that they could not exist on their present pay because of the tremendous increase in the cost of living during the last few months and the new taxes.

CABINET INTERVENES IN BRITISH COAL CRISIS

Conferences Are Held With the Owners and Miners—Decision Expected Today.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 14.—The serious turn of events in the coal mining dispute yesterday brought about the intervention of the Government today. The Minister of Labor had an interview with the representatives of the colliery owners and the Prime Minister received the Industrial Committee of the General Council of the Trades Union Congress.

The decision of the owners to endeavor to open district negotiations on the wages issue has been interpreted by the miners as definite abandonment of the national wages negotiations. It brought the Industrial Committee definitely into line behind the miners' executive, and the object of the committee's meeting with the Prime Minister was to point out to him the significance of the step.

The Minister of Labor in his interview with the owners had already taken up the matter with them. In explaining their action the owners said that it would be necessary for them to terminate the existing contracts, and that notices to that effect would be posted at the pits this week-end, but this, they pointed out, did not imply termination of the negotiations. On the contrary, the owners were preparing a draft of a national wages agreement to embody the principles which they thought could appropriately be settled nationally.

It is understood the Prime Minister did not commit himself to any action in the matter, but a special meeting of the Cabinet tomorrow will consider the situation.

930 Engineers Strike in London.

Copyright, 1926, by The Chicago Tribune Co.

LONDON, April 14.—A new phase of Great Britain's labor trouble appeared on the horizon today when 900 men walked out of the printing machine works of R. Hoe & Co. as a result of the disputed dismissal of a foreman. Efforts were made to reach an agreement, but tonight the tie-up is complete.

It is only three weeks since the men returned to work after a nine weeks' strike which threatened to lead to a lockout of the engineering industry. The executives of thirty-one engineering trades unions met today to discuss the local application of a flat rate increase of £1 a week in engineers' employes wages, and a first-class crisis seems pending.

The provincial districts have been asked to support a joint strike ballot on London's demands.

ALL three men drove their own cars . . . all were firm believers in liability insurance. On the club house veranda, after the game, the conversation turned to this very subject.

"The American Mutual means saving," said one, drawing a letter from his pocket. "Here's an official notice of a 20% dividend on my policy."

One of his friends was skeptical. "Was that the only reason you insured your car with the American Mutual?"

"Certainly not," he replied. "I studied their record pretty thoroughly . . . their financial statement shows unquestioned strength . . . their directors are men of recognized integrity and ability . . . their officers are conservative, efficient and—"

"How about service?" interrupted the skeptic.

"Well, a month or so ago, you remember, I skidded up the back of another fellow's car . . . twenty-four hours later, the American Mutual had settled the case to his entire satisfaction . . . no legal complications, no protracted bickering, no involved wrangles . . . I certainly call that service.

WENT TO VISIT BRONX; FOUND IN SOUTH AFRICA

Husband Must Have Been Robbed and Shanghaied, Says Wife, Who Will Pay Fare Home.

Special to The New York Times.

GLEN COVE, L. I., April 14.—Anthony Madison Colwell, 35 years old, an insurance agent of 17 Donahue Street, married for eight years and the father of three children, who went in his automobile on Feb. 26 to visit a brother in the Bronx and disappeared, was located yesterday in Cape Town, South Africa. How he got there and whether he went of his own volition was unexplained, but his wife said she was certain he was robbed and shanghaied.

Mr. Colwell had $800 with him when he started to call on his brother. He was found to have stopped at the Elks Club in the Bronx, and then to have left his automobile in a garage at Grant Avenue and 161st Street. Later the police learned, he got into a taxicab which took him to Third Avenue and 149th Street, where he had told the driver he was seeking friends.

That was the last seen of him. Mrs. Donahue had the police send out a general alarm. She said he had been a "devoted husband and father and had never stayed away from home without telling her in advance.

The American Consul at Cape Town sent word to Secretary of State Kellogg that a man who said his name was Anthony Madison was there, and was similar in appearance to Colwell, of whom a description had been received.

Mrs. Colwell received word from Washington today and cabled to Cape Town guaranteeing passage for her husband's return.

"He must have been robbed and shanghaied," she said. "I can't imagine his wanting to go away without saying anything about it."

When John Hays Hammond returned to New York yesterday on the White Star liner Olympic he was met at the pier by a delegation of his friends and admirers who extended to him a formal invitation to a birthday dinner in his honor at the Waldorf on May 3. The invitation was presented to Mr. Hammond by Dr. George F. Kunz and Professor Jeremiah W. Jenks on behalf of a "company of friends" of the engineer, who included:

Mr. Hammond was accompanied by his daughter, Miss Natalie Hammond. He was asked to give his recipe for longevity and for the secret of how he conceals his 71 years with so much of the young man's look and activity.

"I sleep when I like," he said, "I work as long as I like, drink and smoke when I like and worry always; but don't tell this to any of the old boys, or they will try it and get into trouble."

Isaac F. Marcosson, writer, returned and told of an audience he had with Premier Mussolini. He said the Italian dictator was like Lloyd George when it came to asking questions and like the late Theodore Roosevelt in dynamic energy.

"He is not a man, but a syndicate of men," said Marcosson.

The Olympic brought 639 passengers, including 360 in the first class. Among them were the Right Rev. G. H. S. Walpole, Bishop of Edinburgh; Mrs. W. J. Tully, sister of Ambassador Alanson B. Houghton, and Mr. Tully; Frank Dilnot, D. H. Carstairs and James Gourlay.

ENJOINS BUS LINE TO NEW ROCHELLE

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 14.—Supreme Court Justice George H. Taylor Jr. of Mount Vernon issued a temporary injunction today against the New Rochelle Sightseeing Company restraining it from operating a motor-bus service from New Rochelle to Times Square. The injunction was obtained by the Westchester Electric Railroad, which is under the control of the Third Avenue Railroad Company and which operates trolley cars from New Rochelle to Mount Vernon, thence to the New York City line.

Operatives of the bus line are to show cause on Friday why a permanent injunction should not be issued.

Although two other companies which are operating bus lines from New Rochelle to Times Square were not specifically named in the injunction, it was said by the railroad's attorneys that it would be equally effective against them.

The trolley company contended that it had franchises to operate trolleys over the routes on which the bus companies were operating. The three companies operating are the New Rochelle Sightseeing Company, the Queen City Bus Company and the New Rochelle Transportation Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 14.—A tax on betting is understood to be one of the expedients the ChanceHor of the Exchequer, Winston Churchill, will adopt to increase the national revenue.

The tax is stated to have been approved by the Cabinet and Mr. Churchill is expected to announce it in his budget speech on April 28. It is estimated the tax will bring in between ten and twelve million pounds yearly in a full year.

For ready-money bets on the race track it is understood that adhesive stamps, similar to entertainment tax stamps, will be used.

DEMOCRATS DEMAND INQUIRY

WASHINGTON, April 15 (AP).—Sweeping investigation of charges of graft in connection with guardianships of incompetent war veterans in various States, and especially in the District of Columbia, will be demanded by Democratic members of the House Veterans' Committee, which has decided to inquire into the situation, with testimony limited to representatives of the Veterans' Bureau.

Representative Rankin, Democrat, of Mississippi, announced today that he would "oppose any attempt to use charges against the State courts as a smoke screen to prevent a thorough investigation of the cases of misconduct with reference to soldier guardianships."

Indications were given that he would have the support of other Democrats. Representative Kindred of New York, attacked the present system of guardianships in a statement prepared for the Congressional Record.

No More Cloudy Teeth Restore Whiteness Now

Gain gleaming, sparkling whiteness

Please accept full 10-day tube free. Note the amazing difference in the color of your teeth and firmness of your gums when dingy film is cleared off as leading dentists urge.

MODERN dental science has discovered a new way in tooth and gum care. Off-color teeth thus are quickly whitened, restored to sparkling clearness. Tender gums are firmed, given healthy coral color.

One's whole appearance thus is often amazingly changed in this way. Famous movie stars use it before going on a scene as an essential part of their "make-up." That's largely why movies' smiles are so glistening.

Leading dental authorities now widely urge it. For it marks a new era in tooth and gum protection. Please accept a full 10-day tube to test. You'll find your teeth are not naturally off color . . . simply coated with a dingy film that clouds them.

Run your tongue across your teeth and you will feel it—a slippery, viscous coating.

That film absorbs discolorations from food, smoking, etc. And that is why your teeth look "off color" and dingy.

It clings to teeth, gets into crevices and stays. It lays your gums open to bacterial attack. Germs by the millions breed in it. And they, with tartar, are a chief cause of pyorrhea and decay.

Old ways won't clear it off

Ordinary dentifrices and cleansing won't fight film successfully. Feel for it now with your tongue. Note how your present cleansing method is failing in its duty.

Now new methods are being used. A dentifrice called Pepsodent—different in formula, action and effect from any other known.

Largely on dental advice, the world has turned to this method.

Clears film off Firms the Gums

It accomplishes two important things at once: Removes that film, then firms the gums.

A few days' use will prove its power beyond all doubt.

RAQUEL MELLER IS WILDLY APPLAUDED

HER SONGS, WITH GESTURES

Versatile Spanish Artist Quietly Carries the Burden of Entire Performance.

RAQUEL MELLER in her repertoire. Assisted by a symphonic orchestra selected from the Philharmonic Society of New York, under the direction of Victor Baravelle. Presented by E. Ray Goetz. At the Empire Theatre on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday evenings and Friday matinees.

PROGRAM — El Relicario (The Charm), Diguili Que Vengut (Tell Him to Come), El Peligro de las Rosas (Beware of the Rose), Nana de la ara (The Lullaby), Ay! Cipriano (Naughty Cipriano), La Hija del Carcelero (The Jailer's Daughter), La Tarde del Corpus (The Procession), La Monteria (Grandmother's Dress), Gitanillo (My Gypsy Sweetheart), Mariana, Flor del Mal (Flower of Sin), La Violetera (The Violet Girl) and Mimosa.

By J. BROOKS ATKINSON.

Announced by all the trumpets of the sky, and considerable advance publicity, Raquel Meller made her bow last evening at the Empire before a heavily starched and bespangled audience in which all the professions and branches of commerce seemed adequately represented. From a little after 9 o'clock until 11, with one intermission, she sang her various numbers, some twelve or thirteen in all, enacting a group of characters ranging from princess to wanton, if those be extremes of the human gamut, with many other implous and melancholy folk characters in between. All that the rhapsodic reports from Paris had forecast seemed borne out in her singularly dynamic personality, and in the versatility of her successive portraits. In spite of the fact that the present scheme of presenting her quite by herself, with no assistance other than that of an orchestra, places too heavy a burden upon her, and robs her art of some of its glamour by too constant repetition, she generously rewards the interest that for several weeks has heralded her approach. Far from the atmosphere of the Paris music halls, where she has appeared as one number on a regular program, she becomes in America something of a prima donna, with all the prerogatives of that celestial being.

Not as a singer, however, for her voice is frequently rough and shrill. And perhaps not as an actor, though her versatility is certainly a token of authentic genius. Her great distinction, at least to the present reporter, seems to be her extraordinarily magnetic personality. Perhaps her most brilliant moment last evening was her initial entrance to sing "El Relicario," while the audience applauded wildly and the theatre echoed with cries of "Raquel." Indeed, every one in the audience seemed far more excited than Señorita Meller. She merely acknowledged the greeting pleasantly, but with a challenging composure that seemed almost to place the burden of the proof upon the audience rather than herself. Through the program she was ever composed, quite the mistress of her peculiar art, and so absorbed in it that at moments she seemed to be alone, engaged in simulated thoughts and emotions that placed the audience completely out of her consciousness.

As a personality that reaches fruition inside the theatre Señorita Meller achieves high distinction. Thoroughly Spanish in her appearance, vibrant in her expression and beautifully rhythmic in her motions—in walking across the stage no less than in pointing her songs with gestures—she dominates without being in the least conspicuous or flamboyant. Upon this personal quality as a base she constructs various Spanish images in her songs, through all of which runs a common note of sadness. For one who has undertaken to engage the attention of an audience for an entire evening without other assistance, she is, indeed, remarkably quiet and unassuming. Even as the girl who murders her rival during the Corpus Christi Fête, she is contained, and never strident under the excitement of the occasion. Instead of the surface glitter commonly associated with the music hall singer, mocking insinuations and brazen coquetry, she is constantly reserved; and the force of her various portrayals is rather the thoroughness with which she embodies them. Here is no tearing of passion to furious tatters. Señorita Meller holds her passions in check that they may be all the stronger thereby.

It has been remarked that her genius is that of complete characterization, of identifying each number as an individual. So it is, at least, in the present program. In a repertoire running distinctly into three or four general moods Señorita Meller does not keep all her numbers unrelated; the gypsy sweetheart might be another phase of the Perpignanian lover or the maiden of Madrid who falls in love with a bull-fighter. For all of them carry forward a similar mood. But at least three times during the evening her appearance seems to be that of another person. Not merely by change of costume and hair-dress, though these are always illuding; but rather by a transformation of the essence of her being. The young wife who sings an old Catalan lullaby to her child has not a moment in common with the jailer's daughter who lets her lover flee. More than that: Señorita Meller acknowledging the applause after singing the "Flor del Mal" has only a superficial resemblance to the miserable street worker who has just been intoning her lament. Only in the concluding number, "La Violetera," or "The Violet Girl," does she cast aside the illusion of characterization. Walking a runway before the footlights, tossing bunches of violets to fortunate members of the audience, and even coquetting a little with the men who are too eager, she is most nearly artless. Even in this number, however, she retires into her character again with the most evanescent sort of illusion.

Notwithstanding the quality of her genius, the glamous that is rather more pungent than brilliance Señorita Meller loses freshness by the present scheme of her presentation. If several of the ly national expression, her kaleidoscope of Spanish scenes, all in high flaming color, might quicken and strike deeper. For her art is an exotic radiance, less than music, less than great acting, but more than these put together. It is rather the unpretentious expression of a national beauty, almost humble, like the modest poet who wrote—

I, half pagan,
Bring my verses to the shrine of poets.

KING SENDS HIS CHEER.

Raquel Meller's American début at the Empire Theatre last night received royal recognition from Spain in the form of a cabled appreciation from King Alfonso. The cablegram, copies of which were included in last night's programs, was sent by Count Torres, the King's secretary, to the Spanish Consul here. It read as follows:

"On the occasion of the début of Raquel Meller, his Majesty the King of Spain wishes you to adequately express his royal appreciation for the American homage to Spanish art."

The Spanish singer's début was witnessed by an audience that included many well-known persons. The Spanish Vice-Consul, Vicente Ramirez, occupied a box in the absence of the Consul-General, Alejandro Berea, who was prevented from attending by illness. With the Vice-Consul were the Misses Anita, Lolita, Celia and Sofia Berea, and Rafael deFigueroa, son of the Duke of Tovar.

With Mayor Walker in another box were Mr. and Mrs. Edward Stanton, Jules Mastbaum, James P. Sinnott, William Seeman and John McKeon. With Alexander P. Moore, former Ambassador to Spain, were Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Livermore, Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Boomer, Howard Shelley and Mrs. Mildred Wendt. Robert Underwood Johnson, former Ambassador to Italy, sat in the first row and presented the singer with a bunch of violets in the course of her final number.

Others present included Mrs. Philip Lydig, William Rhinelander Stewart, Norma Talmadge, Alice Joyce, John Emerson, Anita Loos, Otto H. Kahn, Harry Content, Franklin Simon, Sir William and Lady Wiseman, Mrs. de Acosta Lydig, Jules Bache, the Duchess de Grammont, Mrs. Frederick G. Foster, Grace George, Charles Dillingham, Father Francis P. Duffy, Mrs. William Astor Chanler, William Randolph Hearst, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Slesinger and General Lawrence Atterbury.

DEFEND USE OF 'LA JERITZA.'

Cigarmakers Say It Isn't Singer's Name at All.

In a brief submitted yesterday to Judge Thacher of the United States District Court in the case of Jeritza versus Cohen Brothers, Bernard Chambers, attorney for the defendants, contends that the use of the name "La Jeritza" on the defendant's cigars is perfectly proper; first, because Jeritza is an assumed name and not the one with which the prima donna was born, and second, because her present legal name is Baroness Popper.

The plaintiff's attorneys in their brief cite authorities recognizing a woman's right to choose her own surname. Mme. Jeritza filed her suit on March 16 against Louis and Isadore Cohen, who manufacture cigars under the name of Cohen Brothers at 1,016½ Westchester Avenue, the Bronx. She asked for an injunction restraining them from the use of her name and $25,000 damages. In her suit she said that she is known as "La Jeritza" throughout the civilized world and contended that the phrase could, therefore, not mean any one but her.

CANTOR MAY SING IN OPERA.

Rev. Joseph Schlisky Is Heard by Gallo, San Carlo Impresario.

Before a private audience, the Rev. Joseph Schlisky, cantor of the Congregation of Schevet Achim Anschel Slonin at 172 Norfolk Street, sang yesterday in Aeolian Hall at an audition by Fortune Gallo, impresario of the San Carlo Opera Company. The cantor-tenor, said to be one of the highest salaried in a New York synagogue, will meet Mr. Gallo at noon tomorrow to discuss a possible opera contract for next year.

At the audition he sang airs from Halevy's "La Juive," the last opera in which the late Enrico Caruso appeared, and from Puccini's "Tosca" and "La Bohème."

MRS. FISKE IN 'GHOSTS.'

Will Appear Next Season Under Management of Charles D. Coburn.

Mrs. Fiske, it is announced, will be seen next season in Ibsen's "Ghosts." She will appear under the management of Charles D. Coburn and her engagements will be played chiefly under the auspices of universities, women's clubs and various civic bodies. So far as is known, Mrs. Fiske will not act the play in New York, but will confine herself to a tour.

The rôle of Mrs. Alving, which the actress never before has played, will be her fifth Ibsen rôle.

Eighty-nine paintings of the Barbizon, Dutch and American schools from the collections of J. J. Albright of Buffalo, George Blake Dexter of Boston, James Stillman of New York and other consigners were sold last evening at the Anderson Galleries for $89,850. Private buyers purchased most of the important offerings.

Corot's "View of Douai," from the Albright collection, one of the artist's rare light-colored landscapes, went for $7,750 to H. M. Denning, a private buyer, who also secured for $4,800 Josef Israels's "The Grateful Embers" and the decorative Sir Thomas Lawrence portrait of George IV, from the Albright collection, previously from the Duke of Cambridge collection, for $4,750.

One of the gems of the collection a tiny Whistler, seven by ten inches, "The Sea, Pourville," went to Mrs. C. Lewis Hind for $2,400. W. F. Laporte, another private purchaser, paid $5,100 for L'Hermitte's "Haying," from the Albright collection, with peasant women tossing and raking hay. Mr. Laporte also paid $3,600 for Jacque's "A Normandy Pastoral," with sheep in the foreground at a pool, a shepherdess by a tree and a dog as the principal figures.

Cazin's "Vue de Freport," a night scene, with medieval chateau and houses on the bank of a stream, went to L. E. Bronson for $2,600. E. N. Armstrong paid $4,700 for Mauve's "Nightfall," with sheep entering their night quarters. E. F. Albee acquired the rich "Dutch Countryside" by Theophile De Bock, a wide avenue flanked by superb trees, running through a flat country.

The second L'Hermitte offered, "Wash Day on the Marne," with women busy with their linen along the river banks, went on "order" for $3,200. The Durand-Ruel Galleries secured Mary Cassatt's "Femme et Enfant," a mother holding a child who is paddling her feet in a small pool.

M. A. Newhouse & Sons, Inc., of St. Louis, paid $2,900 for Schreyer's "Wallachian Transport," with brown, black and white Wallachian packhorses fording a stream. Feragil, Inc., paid $2,500 for Twachtman's "The Emerald Pool." It formerly belonged to the same galleries, having been purchased from the artist by them and sold to H. L. Warner of Cleveland, from whose collection it came to the Anderson Galleries to be sold back to them.

'SONGS OF INNOCENCE' BRINGS $1,200 AT SALE

A copy of the rare original issue of William Blake's "Songs of Innocence" brought $1,200 last night at the American Art Galleries at the first session of the sale of library sets and single volumes from the private library of Victor Thrane of Chicago and the library of a well-known New York collector. Last night's session brought a total of $22,973.50. The sale will be continued this afternoon and evening.

The Blake volume, bought by W. Clarkson, is listed as Copy H in Keynes's Bibliography. It is a small volume of few pages. The plates are printed in green and are delicately colored. The book was printed in London in 1789.

A copy of the first edition and first issue of Aiken colored plates, "The Life of a Sportsman," was bought by Martin McGowan for $875. L. Goome paid $650 for a copy of the original edition of another of Henry Aiken's important works, "The National Sports of Great Britain." R. S. Surtees's "Jorrocks Jaunts and Jollities," with Aiken colored plates, first edition, was bought by William F. Thompson for $535.

A set of the first octavo edition of John James Audubon's "The Birds of America" and the same author's "The Quadrupeds of North America," ten volumes in all, was bought by S. M. Stewart for $650.

A copy of the first edition, in the original parts, of "Bleak House," by Charles Dickens, was bought by H. B. Brixey for $575. An original autograph manuscript notebook of George Borrow, comprising about 30,000 words, largely unpublished, was bought by William Clarkson for $500. The same price was paid by H. Smith for a copy of the first edition of "The Sporting Repository," with Aiken colored plates.

Three original watercolor drawings and one proof etching colored by Henry Alken were bought by Gabriel Wells for $400. W. R. Woods paid $325 for a copy of the first edition of Gilbert A Beckett's "The Comic History of England."

KREISLER ON LOVE AND ART.

Love Ranks First, Says Violinist, Going to Europe With Wife.

Before sailing last night on the Hamburg-American liner Deutschland for a vacation in Europe Fritz Kreisler spoke of love and art, also the reason for his twenty-three years of happy married life with Mrs. Kreisler, who sailed with him.

Mr. Kreisler expressed the opinion that the majority of divorces were due to the fact that married people waste their emotions on others besides their mates. He emphasized that "most people get divorces who are looking for happiness and expect to find it in another mate."

'CHERRY PIE' CONTAINS SOME AMUSING SKITS

CHERRY PIE, an "intimate revue" in two acts and twenty-four scenes. Lyrics by Carroll Carroll. Music by Eugene L. Berton. Compiled and staged by Harry Wagstaff Gribble, settings by Rhea Wells, produced by the Inter-Theatre Arts, Inc. At the Cherry Lane Playhouse.

PRINCIPALS—William S. Rainey, Edward Barker, Agnes Lumbard, Ralph Berton, Rachel McMaster, Milton Silver, Jane Barry, Frank Saunders, Margaret Pritchard, Seth Baldwin, Dorothy Tree and Adele Friedland.

Those who last night followed the devious trail from Times Square to Cherry Lane Playhouse found in "Cherry Pie" all the faults and most of the virtues of such a semi-professional revue and an abundance of life and youth besides. The production contains some amusing skits and songs crowded between other numbers which do not quite come off, and it serves a major purpose in introducing an engaging young entertainer by the name of Agnes Lumbard, who carried off chief honors of the evening.

After getting away to a rather bad start, "Cherry Pie" gradually gained momentum, which resulted in a second part that in a measure atones for some of the earlier scenes. There are some decidedly diverting skits, including "The Fall of an Usher," by Jean Hawthorne and Watson Cady, in which Miss Lumbard stars; "The Village Blacksmith," in which the Longfellow poem is presented in the George Kelly, Elinor Glyn and Eugene O'Neill modes; "These Alarming People," a travesty on such plays as "The Vortex," "Craig's Wife," "These Charming People," "The Green Hat," "Young Woodley," "Stolen Fruit," and others of this season, and "Hash," one of the two contributions of Harry Wagstaff Gribble.

Lyrics of a generally superior sort have been fashioned by Carroll Carroll, with some additions by Edward H. Weaver, and there are some attractive tunes, notably, "Why Do You Lome Me?" "Maybe It's Love" and "Wicked Eyes," by Eugene H. Berton. There is a hilarious ditty about contemporary journalism which was one of the hits of the performance. And there is a somewhat muddled but still rather striking first act finale which shows the Charleston originating from negro spirituals and hymns. At least to one spectator, such seemed the general purport of the scene.

All these numbers and many more are done by a sizable company of varied talents. William Rainey carries much of the show on his shoulders, and he does a variety of jobs in skillful fashion. Jane Barry, Whitney Jones, Ralph Berton and Edward Barker, Dorothy Tree and Seth Barber are also pleasingly prominent in the undertaking.

"Cherry Pie" shows a good measure of ingenuity and novelty. Obviously out of the "Grand Street Follies," by the "Garrick Gaieties," it falls short of both its progenitors, but still has recommendations of its own, not the least of which is that its twenty-four scenes were mounted on the small Cherry Lane stage.

PITTSBURG SYMPHONY ENGAGES HAGEMAN

Conductor, Formerly of Metropolitan Opera, to Lead New Organization Opening May 2.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, April 14.—The Pittsburgh Symphony Society has engaged Richard Hageman as conductor and will make its bow to the music-loving public of Pittsburgh on Sunday evening, May 2, at the Syria Mosque. This new symphony organization has a personnel of ninety musicians whose names are well known in musical circles.

Mr. Hageman, the distinguished Dutch-American conductor, was for many years associated with the Metropolitan and Chicago Opera companies. He was born in Leeuwarden, Holland, his father being Maurice Hageman, former director of the Amsterdam Conservatory of Music, and his mother, Francesca de Majowski Hageman, was a Russian and a court singer in Holland.

Mr. Hageman led the symphony orchestra at the San Francisco Exposition, where he conducted the first performance of Saint-Saens' "Hail California," with the famous composer present. He has conducted concerts for six Summer seasons with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at Ravinia Park, Ill. He has for many years conducted the Metropolitan Opera House Orchestra on its Spring tour and for the fifth consecutive season the Summer concerts of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor.

AUTHORS RATIFY CONTRACT.

Managers to Sign Agreement as Soon as Copies Are Printed.

The Dramatists' Guild, at a meeting at the Hotel Roosevelt yesterday afternoon, formally ratified the basic minimum contract recently agreed to by the Guild's council and a committee of producing managers. Owen Davis presided.

Nearly all of the producers have signified a willingness to sign the new agreement, the details of which have already been thrashed out between managers and playwrights. The contract, as soon as copies can be printed, will be signed by the Producing Managers' League, recently organized for that purpose, and probably also by the producers as individuals.

The contract gives the Dramatists' Guild a closed shop, and also provides for a motion picture sales agent whose existence will keep the right of sale of motion picture rights from being the sole privilege of either the producer or the author.

INFANT MORTALITY SHOWS STEADY DROP

Birth Rate Also Declines, According to League of Nations Report.

IN ALL CIVILIZED WORLD

Infant mortality shows a steady decrease throughout the civilized world, while the rate of births is also on the decline, according to the latest Epidemiological Report of the Health Committee of the League of Nations, received here by the League of Nations Non-Partisan Association and given out yesterday.

The League's statistics for the United States are based upon a combination of this year's death rate with last year's birth rate, but bear out in substance the more recent data of European countries.

In Boston, the mortality rate dropped from ninety per 1,000 in the first week of 1925 to sixty-eight in the last week of that year. New York's decrease was from sixty to fifty, while Chicago dropped from ninety-five to sixty and Philadelphia, showing a low mark of fifty-four during the Summer, had for the year as a whole the decline from eighty-seven to seventy. Detroit, showing eighty-eight to seventy-six for the year, dropped to sixty a one time and San Francisco, with fifty-eight to fifty, reached in the Summer the low mark of thirty-nine. Among European cities, London is the only one reporting any considerable rise. That was from seventy-two to 114. During the Summer months the rate fell as low as thirty-seven. Berlin, Paris, Prague and Brussels also show decreases.

The birth rate in these cities fell even more consistently than the death rate. London, Paris, Moscow, Prague and New York show fewer births, the figures for New York being 21.1 to 19.2 for November, the last report received by the League for this country.

The only instance cited of noteworthy increase in the birth rate is in the South Sea Islands, which showed an increase over deaths of 17.3 per cent. In sixteen Scottish cities the birth rate rose a fraction of 1 per cent.

LUCREZIA BORI GETS OVATION AT FAREWELL

Lucrezia Bori, about whose exotic artistry and personal charm has centred most of the Metropolitan's evocation of Spanish heroines and, in the present season, at least one opera in the Spanish tongue, had her day of triumph yesterday in taking leave of local admirers for the season. Thrice acclaimed in "La Bohème," she faced a rain of flowers from boxes and balconies after the snow scene at the Paris gates, and in her turn tossed blossoms plucked from her bouquets out over the orchestra.

The afternoon ended with a riot for Bori in and out of the house. One crowd flocked to the front rails as the soprano came out for solo curtain calls after the fourth act. Another waited in Fortieth Street, massed around her limousine, and blocked traffic there to cheer her driving away. Messrs. Scotti and Rothier and Miss Hunter also sang their season's farewell yesterday, while Gigli and Didur were to have yet another hearing at Saturday's final matinee.

In the evening "Faust" awoke memories for a last audience in the social Wednesday subscription, though for all of the cast there were further appearances in the remaining three days. With Miss Mario, Messrs. Lauri-Volpi and Chaliapin, the singers included Anthony and Howard, Danise and Wolfe. Tonight the German wing sings adieu in "Götterdämmerung," tomorrow Chaliapin in "Don Quichotte," and Saturday the Italians in "Andrea Chenier" and "Gioconda."

BANKS GLEE CLUB GIVES FINE CONCERT

Bruno Huhn Leads Male Chorus in Closing Program of 47th Season—Recitals of Night.

Bruno Huhn led the Banks Glee Club in close formation, all seated well to the front of a curtained stage at Carnegie Hall last night, in the closing program of its forty-seventh season, vocally the most successful and possibly most varied in actual music performed during the near half-century of this sterling male chorus from New York's financial district. Wagner and Schubert, Stephen Foster and MacDowell were among the classic and the native groups of choral songs. William Falk played piano accompaniments and Dr. J. Christopher Marks was at the organ.

Those assisting as soloists were Joanne de Nault, a new contralto from Montreal; Catherine Wade Smith, violinist, who had been heard recently in recital, and Walter Hansen, pianist, now a professor of his instrument at the New England Conservatory. Miss de Nault sang with the club members in Victor Herbert's "The Angelus" and she later added the great air from Saint-Saën "Samson and Delilah."

More than a half dozen local halls had concerts and recitals last night. Oscar Ziegler, pianist of both studious and vigorous musicianship, reappeared at the Town Hall, varying some admirable classics with new pieces by Walter Schulthess, Othmar Schoeck, Scriabin and Respighi. Edward Rechlin also returned in an organ recital at Aeolian Hall.

Savell Walevitch sang at Steinway Hall, in costume, his native Russian folksongs, while Solomon Golub gave at Wurlitzer's his original melodies and poems of Jewish life. There were also programs by the Brahms Club at the Waldorf-Astoria, Baldwin Allan-Allen at the Brooklyn Academy and the Matteo Bensman memorial in the Bronx.

WOMEN VOTERS GATHER.

500 Delegates Already In St. Louis for League Convention.

ST. LOUIS, April 14 (AP).—More than 500 delegates to the League of Women Voters' Convention have arrived and hundreds more are expected before the annual meeting opens on Friday. The convention is to be preceded by executive conferences and open sessions.

Open sessions today discussed problems of women in industry, social hygiene and efficiency in government, and were led by Miss Mollie Ray Carroll, Mrs. Ann Webster and Miss Belle Sherman, respectively Chairmen of the three departments.

Among the speakers were Mrs. Charles M. Lea of Pennsylvania; Dean Isidore Loeb of Washington University's School of Commerce and Finance; Mrs. George W. Prichard of Santa Fe, and Mrs. Catherine Phillips Edson of Los Angeles.

Mrs. Lea said there should be at least one woman on every election board throughout the nation.

"Men willingly admit that women on the whole are more straightforward and less inclined to trickery, and they view elections more sincerely, so to speak, and not as the occasion for display of political trickery and strategy," the speaker asserted. "Those of us who have served on these boards or who have been watchers at the polls realize how easily the members of the board can be influenced by fear or bribery."

PROTESTS BARRING GRAPES.

Madrid Paper Suggests United States May Ban Other Spanish Products.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MADRID, April 14.—El Sol publishes today a long editorial criticizing the United States policy regarding non-admission of Spanish grapes. The article asserts that just as the United States found the Mediterranean fly investing grapes, other objections might be found in order to prohibit the entry of other Spanish products.

"We do not ask concretely for any reprisal," says El Sol. "We limit ourselves to pointing out facts. Now we only send to the great Republic copper from Rio Tinto, almonds, olives, onions and goat skins. Plantations of almonds and olives already are being cultivated in certain States of the Union, and we therefore fear that some day these other Spanish products will be accused of a pest similar to that of Almeria grapes, and that their admission will be prohibited at United States custom houses.

"Thank heaven the United States wishes to compensate outraged Spanish economic life by sending over legions of tourists who return to us the excess monew which we pay the United States for its exportations of cotton, machinery and automobiles which we could easily purchase from other countries, which do not accuse us of having converted our vineyard into incubators for the Mediterranean fly.

PEGGY JOYCE PLANS NEW HOME AT MIAMI

Has No Comment on Wife's Assertion That Comstock Is Not Free to Marry.

MIAMI, Fla., April 14 (AP).—While a cloud gathered over her fifth venture into matrimonial seas, in the form of claims of a former spouse of her fiancé, Stanley Comstock, Miami real estate operator, Peggy Hopkins Joyce, internationally known stage and screen actress, prepared to leave here tomorrow for New York.

The cloud that gathers is the assertion of Mrs. Evelyn Comstock of Chicago that her husband's divorce granted in Florida recently is illegal. Neither Miss Joyce nor Mr. Comstock commented on the new angle and claims of Mrs. Comstock today.

Miss Joyce devoted the larger part of yesterday to repacking the five large trunks and several other packages of clothing that she brought with her to Miami last week.

Her preparations for departure were broken, however, by a visit to the villa of L. Jerry Flourn, at Miami Beach, which it became known Miss Joyce plans to purchase as a "love nest."

On her journey to New York Miss Joyce will be accompanied by her fiancé and several close friends.

CHICAGO, April 14 (AP).—Peggy Joyce's declaration in Miami that she is engaged to marry Stanford E. Comstock, real estate dealer, has received a cold reception from Mrs. Evelyn Comstock, who says that Peggy's fifth matrimonial choice is not free to wed.

Mrs. Comstock, who is employed in a misses' shop here, said her attorneys had informed her that a divorce Comstock obtained in Florida last year was not valid, on the ground that she had received no legal notice of the proceedings.

She also related that she had lived with Comstock after the divorce suit had been filed. They spent the Winter in Florida, she said, and also were together in New York three weeks ago. She also told of an earlier divorce in Detroit in 1923 and a remarriage in Cleveland.

BRITISH CENSOR TELLS SALOME TO WEAR MORE

Frances Carson in 'Katerina' Says Only One Woman Protested and She Stayed.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 14.—Frances Carson, an American actress who plays the part of Salome in Andreyev's "Katerina," at the Barnes Theatre, has been ordered by the British censor to wear more clothes. The alteration of some lines in the fourth act of the play has also been requested.

"The only real protest," said Miss Carson, "happened last night when a woman in the stalls cried out, 'I think it's terrible and I protest!' I notice, however, she stayed to the end. The authorities here don't seem to care how immoral a play is so long as the costumes are decent."

NEW STYLES IN SHOES SHOWN BY MODELS

Manufacturers See Footwear for All Occasions at Annual Association Dinner.

Style and color were the predominating features of the Style Review which followed the dinner of the National Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association last night at the Hotel Astor. J. C. McKeon, the toastmaster; F. M. Moffat of the Tanners' Council of America, J. J. Holden, Miss Mercie Higley of the Brown Durell Company and other speakers summed up these two items in what they termed "shoe consciousness."

New styles in women's footwear were shown by models, who appeared on a runway attired for various occasions and wearing shoes appropriate to their costumes.

The masculine styles were shown by a group of male models. They included tax oxfords and button shoes, black oxfords, golf shoes of various styles, buttoned morning shoes of black and gray and formal evening shoes of black patent leather and kid, some with white pearl buttons.

There was also a display of women's hosiery, in the course of which Miss Higley explained the importance of type and color in stockings with relation to costumes and complexion.

FEDERAL FILM RULE OPPOSED BY WOMEN

INTERFERENCE NOT WANTED

Upshaw and Swope Argue For Their Licensing Plan and Canon Chase Favors It.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Federal regulation of motion pictures through a system of licensing as provided in bills presented by Representatives Upshaw of Georgia and Swope of Pennsylvania were opposed today before the House Committee on Education by representatives of women's organizations. Any measure for Federal censorship or supervision was criticised as likely to inject politics into the conduct of the public's amusements.

Mrs. Thomas C. McGoldrick, Chairman of the Department of Literature of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, said that the quality of moving pictures had improved, and that the question should be left "to the judgment of the American people, who are not unclean."

Mrs. Alonzo Richardson of Georgia said she had no complains to make of the love scenes depicted on the screen, although care should be taken to prevent people in rural regions from seeing far more salacious pictures that were presented in larger cities.

Points to Box Office Receipts.

"Do you think the moral taste of rural America falls behind the moral taste of urban America?" Representative Black of New York asked.

Mrs. Richardson would not admit that, but she suggested that folks in the country should have more regulation in the matter of pictures than they get at present.

"It is significant to note," said Mrs. McGoldrick in her testimony, "that the ten best pictures of last year, according to box office receipts, had no sex appeal in them. The surest way to regulate films is by the box office method. In that way the industry will cleanse and regulate itself."

Canon William Sheafe Chase of Brooklyn, representing the Motion Pictures Council of America; the Rev. Charles Scanlon, director of the Department of Moral Welfare of the Presbyterian Church, and Representatives Upshaw and Swope endorsed the two bills.

Fighting "The Wolves of Immorality."

"In proposing a commission to license only such pictures as do not violate decency nor outrage 'that righteousness that exalteth a nation,' "Mr. Upshaw said. "'e are simply proposing to stand at the door of our homes, our churches and our schools and fight back the wolves of immorality that are crouching to destroy the hope and strength of the nation."

Representative Swope, who, as Deputy Attorney General of Pennsylvania shared in the enforcement of that State's "picture show" law, said:

"My only objection to the Board of Review is that it has no power to enforce its decisions."

Representative Twombly of Pennsylvania, who served on the State Board of Censorship before it was suppressed, said he thought motion pictures passing between the States should be regulated by the Federal Government.

The committee will resume its hearings tomorrow.

LONDON CHEERS ASTAIRES.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 14.—Probably the warmest welcome ever given by London to an American actor or actress was that accorded tonight to Fred and Adele Astaire, who opened at the Empire Theatre in "Lady, Be Good."

London saw the Astaires for the first time in "Stop Flirting," an otherwise mediocre show which they turned into a success. It conceived such a liking for them that their first appearance tonight was a signal for a loud and long demonstration. Enthusiasm mounted during the highly successful progress of "Lady, Be Good," and at the conclusion of the play there were almost a dozen curtain calls and speeches by the Astaires and their fellow-countryman, William Kent. Kent, who takes the part played by Walter Catlett in New York, seems likely to be as popular as Catlett himself when he played here some years ago.

"Lady, Be Good" seems to be in for a long run.

SCHOOL HEAD SEES HIS PLAY

Got Two Days Off Without Pay—London Hails Work as Masterpiece.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 14.—T. C. Murray, an Irish schoolmaster who wrote "Autumn Fire," a play which was successfully produced in London last night, returned to Dublin today like his fellow-countryman, Sean O'Casey, with honors thick upon him.

This gray-haired man of 60, at whose school the late Lord Northcliffe was once a pupil, has received two days' leave without pay to allow him to attend the first night in London. His stay, though brief, will, however, prove worth while, since he goes back hailed as the author of a masterpiece. His play has practically the same theme treated by Eugene O'Neill in "Desire Under the Elms," which was banned in England, but treats it with a restraint which robs it of all unpleasantness.

TO GIVE O'NEILL PLAY FOR BENEFIT OF JURY

Cast Will Offer Evidence Today in Los Angeles Against the Police Charges.

LOS ANGELES, April 14.—The "Desire Under the Elms" company inadvertently was billed for two performances this afternoon, and the Judiciary gracefully yielded to the public. The trial of seventeen members of the cast on charges of presenting an obscene play was adjourned by Municipal Judge Fredericksom at noon to allow the presentation of a matinee performance. The trial will be resumed tomorrow.

Mary Carr, film actress, testified in defense of the Eugene O'Neill play. She said she regarded it as a great work with a moral lesson, and found no fault with the asserted objectionable words. She had taken two of her children to see it, she said.

She said the children were 22 and 26 years old. Luella Carr, her daughter, testified similarly to her mother.

Miss Bernice Davidson, 27 years old a graduate of Smith College and described by defense lawyers as a "typical 1926 girl," gave an account of her reaction to the drama.

"I wasn't shocked," she testified. "I didn't blush, as I understand the policeman who saw it did. In fact, it taught me a great moral lesson and there were times when tears came to my eyes because of the pathos of the play."

"Weren't you shocked by the language used by the characters?" asked the prosecutor.

"Of course not," replied Miss Davidson. "I could not expect characters of that sort, in that kind of a country, living that kind of a life, to use pretty words under stress of intense emotion."

"Not a bit," the girl answered again. "I do not condone the use of such words generally, and when I left the theatre I was not thinking of them."

"Well, what were you thinking of when you left the theatre?" asked the prosecutor.

"I was thinking of the impressiveness of the play rather than the fact that some of the players, carrying out their rôles, used indelicate language in several scenes."

Tomorrow afternoon the cast, all sworn as witnesses, will give a performance of the play for the jury and the Judge. The performance will be the last evidence to be submitted for the defense. The play will be performed on this occasion strictly as it was performed the night the members of the cast were arrested by vice squad officers.

GUARD INA CLAIRE, ACTRESS.

Detectives Seek Sender of Threatening Letter Demanding $5,000.

Miss Ina Claire, the actress, received a letter Tuesday threatening her life unless she forwarded $5,000 to a man who signed himself as Joe Klutys, at 81 Gun Hill Road, the Bronx. She was being guarded yesterday by several private detectives at her home at 15 West Fifty-fifth Street and at the Fulton Theatre, where she is appearing in "The Last of Mrs. Cheney."

The private detectives and detectives of the White Plains Station, the Bronx, who are working on the case, expect to arrest a man shortly who approached Miss Claire some time ago and atetmpted to obtain money from her.

THE ILLINOIS SENATORSHIP.

Senator BORAH would be "more than human," as public men say when acknowledging a tribute, if he failed to point to the Republican primary in Illinois as a vindication of his own course. He declares that the defeat of Senator MCKINLEY has "indexed" the sentiment in this country against "the League Court." This is a rough and ready inference of the kind often drawn in politics. In this case it happens to coincide with the general belief, and, right or wrong, there is no getting away from the popular interpretation of the result in Illinois. If Senator MCKINLEY had been successful, it would have been said that the people in Illinois delighted to honor him for voting for the World Court. That would not have been true, but it could not have been effectively denied. It is now said that his advocacy of the World Court was the sole cause of his defeat. That is not true, but for most practical effects, for debating use, for campaign purposes, it will doubtless serve just as well as if it were.

They mix their politics in Illinois. They mixed them hard this year. Take the case of The Chicago Tribune. It has steadily been among the most violent opponents of the World Court. It pictured that peaceful institution as if it were a juggernaut crushing the bones of Illinois farmers on their devoted prairies. Well, Senator MCKINLEY was for the Court. His Republican rival for the Senatorship, Mr. FRANK L. SMITH, is against it. Whom did The Tribune support? Last Sunday it came out for the friend of the World Court, Senator MCKINLEY. Its explanation was a trifle tortuous, but the conclusion it reached was as follows:

> Senator MCKINLEY accepted the reservations which make the Court largely harmless. In spite of our opinion of the World Court, we are not inclined to have this issue in its present form determine the nomination, and The Tribune's preference is for MCKINLEY. He is experienced in the Senate and in Washington. He served four teen years as a Representative before he was elected to the Senate. He is an able man. He has been of continued help in advancing the Illinois waterway and other State interests.

Looking coolly at the whole Republican situation in Illinois, as it has stood for a long time back—long before the Senate voted to join the World Court—the strong probability emerges that Senator MCKINLEY would have been defeated no matter what he did. Tuesday was only the culmination of a battle of the politicians which had for months been planned and waged. There was a fierce struggle to get possession of the party organization. Faction was fighting faction, and boss wrestling with boss. Against Senator MCKINLEY was a skilled and rising politician who had nearly defeated him six years ago, and who both bided his time and improved it. He strengthened himself with the public while at the head of a State commission, made himself solid with the party machine, cemented various useful political alliances, and entered the primary contest secure of victory. That he would have won it in any case is the conviction of impartial observers of the political trend in the Republican Party of Illinois. It was said, perhaps maliciously, at the time when Senator BORAH and Senator REED of Missouri went to Chicago to demand the repudiation of Senator MCKINLEY, that they already knew him to be as good as beaten. There have been such cases of being strong on the stronger side, but that need not be pressed in this instance.

Senator MCKINLEY lost for a variety of reasons. It is impossible to say which was the more powerful. Doubtless the World Court affair was one of them. The Chicago Tribune could not undo its own work. It had tried to give Illinois the shivers over a horrible monster, and could not, in its anxiety to help Senator MCKINLEY, cause the dread which it had created to vanish at the end of the campaign. Friends of the Court must frankly concede that Mr. MCKINLEY was injured at home by favoring it. It must also be admitted that the outcome of the Illinois primary is something of a blow to the prestige of President COOLIDGE. Senator MCKINLEY voted as he did in order to "uphold the President," and the Illinois voters were called upon to stand by Mr. COOLIDGE. Doubtless the majority of them voted as they did for other reasons; but it can always be asserted that Senator MCKINLEY's attitude at Washington toward the World Court killed him politically in Illinois. But it did not kill the Court. Senator BORAH majestically announces that the campaign against the Court will "go on." It will have to go on for many years and be uniformly successful before there can be the slightest possibility that the Senate of the United States will even attempt to rescind the vote by which it adhered to the World Court.

RUSSIA AND DISARMAMENT.

TCHITCHERIN's note, declining for the Soviet Government the invitation to the Disarmament Conference at Geneva, is ably written. If the Powers really attach to Russia's presence the importance which they profess, they easily could have selected a meeting-place outside Switzerland, where the Moscow Government had made it plain it would never consent to go. From this the Russian Foreign Minister argues that the Powers are only too glad to have the conference fail if, with the same stone, they can kill a second bird by making Russia responsible for it. No doubt the Tchitcherin message would have been still more effective if it had proceeded to call the alleged bluff. If Great Britain and France are really dead set against a reduction of arms, what a splendid opportunity Moscow had to put them in a hole! TCHITCHERIN could have said that Russia is so concerned for the peace of Europe that it is willing to sacrifice its just resentment against the Swiss Government for the sake of the common good.

Some reply to the Russian indictment ought to be forthcoming, either in word or deed. The most effective answer would be a decision by the members of the League to take up disarmament without Russia's collaboration. It is not impossible that on this issue of arms reduction the importance of Russia has been exaggerated, as it was formerly exaggerated in the matter of economic rehabilitation in Western Europe. Possibly economic progress would have been more rapid if Russia were in harmony with Western Europe. Undoubtedly the arms problem would be simplified by Russia's participation, but a fair measure of progress is not impossible without Moscow. The plea that Poland and Rumania dare not cut down their military forces in face of a standing Russian threat needs to be closely scrutinized. The Soviet Government will think twice before venturing on a war of aggression. Moscow needs peace more than any other European capital.

TRAFFIC AND PARK AVENUE.

The question whether Park Avenue begins with HENRY MANDEL's new $7,000,000 office building at Thirty-second Street or with Mrs. ROBERT L. BACON's red-brick, jigsaw-eaved Victorian cottage at Thirty-fourth Street is once more in suspended animation. Aldermen who have supported Mrs. BACON's claim, and who were relied upon for its ultimate triumph, sank into indifference when they found that it was "not a political organization matter." There are rumors of divided counsels in Tammany, even of personal animosities; but we prefer to believe that what agitates the Wigwam is what agitates the rest of us—a matter of sentiment. Shall this last remaining haunt of the old ease and quiet, of nineteenth-century amplitude and social distinction, be sacrificed to twentieth-century bustle and traffic?

Except for one fact, we should all answer "No." That fact is that it has already been so sacrificed. On Mrs. BACON's side of the avenue one-half of the houses are already replaced by fifteen-story apartment and office buildings; the remaining houses are old brownstone fronts, destined soon to give way. On the western side are many spacious and beautiful mansions, some of them truly palatial; but the largest of these have been converted into clubs and others are dusty-windowed and tenantless. Already traffic is regulated by green and red lights, jams of stalled cars alternating with bursts of terrific speed. Morning and evening the sidewalks are crowded with people going to and fro between office buildings and the Grand Central Station. What was once the haunt of carriage folk, remote and sequestered, is now largely given over to cliff dwelling and business. The roadways have been widened until the park that gave the avenue its name is a ribbon of sod. With the building of the viaduct and the western roadway at the Grand Central, Park Avenue became a valve in one of our two main arteries; when the ramp at Thirty-fourth Street is widened at the old armory, and the eastern roadway is built about the Grand Central, it will be as densely thronged as Fifth Avenue.

In 1924, when "No. 1 Park Avenue" was projected at Thirty-second Street, the Board of Aldermen had extended the avenue two blocks southward by unanimous vote, adding twenty feet to its width. Business men rented offices and had quantities of stationery printed with the new address. Already large sums have been added to assessments and the increase in values is destined to extend far down Fourth Avenue. What confronts us, in brief, is that always melancholy yet always welcome phenomenon, the march of progress. Those who have tears to shed will shed them with one drooping but one auspicious eye.

CRIME SURVEYS.

In the bill providing for a State Crime Commission, now awaiting Governor SMITH's approval, there is a larger promise than in the special "crime" bills. The latter scratch the surface of a vast and complicated problem. The nature of the new laws is not such as to justify the apprehension felt by some that we are in danger of being swept away on a tide of panic legislation. But obviously they are experiments more or less in the dark. The adequate basis of fact for determining the extent and nature of the crime problem does not exist in this State or in the greater part of the country. Cleveland had its crime survey in 1921. Missouri is just completing a similar investigation. For an adequate study in New York much more than the $50,000 appropriated by the State Legislature will be needed.

The issues involved are wider than the alleged break-down of the machinery of the criminal law. The entire social life of the country enters into the question. To this extent the criminologists are justified in their warning against a surrender to the rising demand for severer penalties and swift punishment as the sure and only remedy, though the comparative figures for serious crime and its punishment do constitute a prima facie case against the administration of criminal justice. In 1908 Chief Justice TAFT pointed out that in 1885 there were 1,808 murders and 108 executions and in 1904 there were 8,482 murders and 116 executions. In the latter year, for one and a half times the population, there were four and three-quarter times as many homicides. Yet despite this disconcerting increase in violence the ratio of executions had fallen from 1 for every 16.7 homicides to 1 for every 73. By 1915 the murder rate, as compared with 1885, was more than five times as large for a population less than one and three-quarter times as large, but the ratio of executions had dropped to 1 for every 77.5 homicides. The Missouri survey has just shown how overwhelming are the odds in favor of the criminal today.

Judge TAFT was speaking nine years before we went into the war and twelve years before national prohibition. Obviously neither one as the popular explanation of the "crime wave" will suffice. What was happening during the twenty years after 1885 to account for the enormous increase in the taking of human life? Was it the change in the ethnic makeup of the population, the shift of population from the country to the cities, the rising industrialization, the heightened speed of life, the mounting prosperity with a corresponding sag in moral fiber? To speak of the breakdown of the machinery of justice is far from a complete answer, since such a break-down must itself be regarded as the reflex of the entire social conspectus. It is not a temporary but a chronic condition that must be studied. To that end the Crimes Commissions now rising all over the country will contribute more than specific laws. The commissions are bound to go deeper into fundamentals than the Legislatures, and are much less likely to subside from temporary fits of agitation into indifference and forgetfulness.

RAILWAY MERGER PLANS.

The Cummins bill regulating the consolidation of railways into systems has been favorably reported. It extends from three to five years the period within which the companies may combine, subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. After five years the commission is to promote further consolidations either by proposing other systems or by allocation of roads to existing systems. The measure comes forward so late that there is doubt of its enactment at this session. Delay may increase favor for legislation, simply making railway consolidation voluntary, with the commission's oversight. The Conference of Shippers has just approved the expression of the National Industrial League that the railways "should "work out their own salvation, subject to the Interstate Commission." On the same day the President of the Northern Pacific said that Federal legislation is necessary to legalize the consolidation of the Hill system, as otherwise the laws of the States along the line would forbid it. Mr. HOWARD ELLIOTT added: "I think the temper "of the public for consolidation is less "keen than it was."

Other railway managers have expressed themselves in lukewarm fashion. Mr. LOOMIS has said formally that consolidation "is now the "mentary fad of the regulationists "after they had penalized consolidation for thirty years." Mr. LOOMIS says that consolidation "will not "prove the unmixed blessing promised by the theorists" and the creation of "systems too large for adequate administration is certain to "bring serious impairment of the efficient service record of recent "years." England enacted compulsory consolidation, with unhappy results. Sir HENRY THORNTON, the American President of the Canadian National, said when he returned from his English trip of observation that smaller systems are more efficient because their human contacts are better. Large or small systems may be either strong or weak, just as separate companies are. The future is hidden from Congress and railway managers alike. Voluntary consolidation may make mistakes, but that danger rests upon railways in common with owners of any property.

THE MORAL COUNTRYSIDE.

Dwellers in rural tranquillity are telling the world once more that "GOD "made the country and man made the "town." They complain that Spring brings the city mischief-makers out to disturb rustic quiet and morals. But Spring also brings out the voices of country enthusiasts, chirping like robins to sing the purity, simplicity and sweetness of their sinless lives in contrast to the "hilarious civic invasion" that they are compelled to submit to now. The words just quoted are among the mildest uttered by Justice MINTURN of New Jersey in a judicial sketch of the "ear-splitting avalanche of monotonous noise" anticipated now that the city's jazz bands are moving out into the country's sweet air. WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE recently made some constructive suggestions for keeping the small town free of the horrid mists of wickedness that blow from the cities. Let the village resident who, by some strange chance, falls into a mood of frivolity go to the big city to kick up his heels. There his naughtiness will pass unnoticed in the midst of the accustomed disorder and he will return to the local and spiritual atmosphere ready to lead an exemplary life.

Cynical city dwellers are inclined to think that villagers behave discreetly at home because they live surrounded by interested and prying neighbors. Everybody in a small town is more or less in fear of the argus-eyed censor. However, unseemly acts have been known to occur in communities of less than 10,000 population. Even on farms crimes have been committed. Some of the weirdest, most inhuman deeds have been done far from evil urban scenes. Where the pellucid brook ripples through the quiet valley and no one is there to see but the pale moon, strange, morbid passions have found dreadful expression. A porcelain tub, an automatic elevator and forty-story buildings are not the necessary concomitants of crime. If the pessimistic poet was right, and "man marks the earth with ruin," his activities are not confined to the paved streets. They spread to the pathless woods, no matter what may be said in support of the myth of the superior morality of the countryside.

TEACHING LITERARY STYLE.

The most quoted definition of style—also most often misquoted and misunderstood—is undoubtedly that of BUFFON. Now the "Discourse" from which it is taken and which he delivered a hundred and seventy years ago has been translated into Latin. The curious will at once pounce upon the rendering of his definition of style. Writ in choice modern Latin it reads: "Oratio autem homo est ipse." The probability is, however, that BUFFON was not himself aware that he was making a definition. He was discriminating between the contents of any given writing and its form. He said that knowledge, facts, discoveries, and so on, could be taken from one hand and transferred to another possibly with advantage. All these things are outside of the man. Then he added: "Le style est l'homme même." It is the writer's very self.

This is a hackneyed truth, yet it seems to have dropped out of the minds of those too ambitious people who nowadays undertake to teach good literary style. To be sure, they find another name for it. They call it "technique." Volumes are written and professorships are founded for the purpose of instructing aspirants in the technical side of short-story writing, of novel-writing. But if the point made by BUFFON is well taken, whether in French, Latin or English, style is one of the incommunicable things. You have it, or you don't. If you are not able to pick it up for yourself, no man can make you a present of it. On this subject the veteran GEORGE SAINTSBURY has a few pungent things to say in the April number of The Dial. After having critically read during his long life several thousands of novels, he confesses that he cannot tell why one man writes good stories and another does not. In regard to the possibility of imparting the secret of "technique" he is obdurately skeptical. Here is his summary: "To put "the conclusion of the whole matter, "you will write good novels if you are "a good novelist; but exactly how you "become a good novelist and how you "write good novels, probably you do "not yourself know, certainly no other "human being can tell you."

This may seem to Gilfed Hopkins and all his tribe a counsel of despair. It does mean despair for those who think to attain an excellent style by sitting at the feet of lecturers, or playing the sedulous ape to other writers. But it means hope for the man who has it in him, and who swears by high Heaven that it will come out, if hard work and infinite pains and repeated experiment can bring it out.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Psychology Turned to Good Use.

Nature does sometimes catch up with art, as in the case of the "radio burglar." Neither Sherlock Holmes nor Mr. CHESTERTON's almost as well known Father Brown ever solved a mysterious crime by a more skillful use of deductive reasoning than did the police in this case.

First, by following what turned out to be a false clue, though it served them well, they arrived at an ex-convict who was "going straight." In a wallet dropped by the radio burglar was a card bearing that convict's name. He soon proved his own innocence and then was asked who was likely to have been using his name. At once he thought of and mentioned HILTON. Then HILTON's record, running back to Elmira, was searched, and standing out in it was the fact that he had been a baseball player and was a baseball "fan." Thereupon the detectives decided that probably he would attend the opening of the baseball season at the Polo Grounds, and posted themselves at the gates to wait for him.

And he came! Not only that, but, according to some accounts, he came to the gate that would bring him just behind third base, the position he formerly played! That looks a bit like superfluous embroidery of an already well-decorated story, but it may be true. Anyhow, HILTON was caught—not by accident, not by the use of hired informers in the underworld, but by the exercise of mental powers and the utilization of knowledge of human nature and especially of criminal human nature.

The detectives who did this deserve Commissioner MCLAUGHLIN's careful attention and doubtless will get it. These particular detectives not only are intelligent but they have to the full the courage characteristic of the force, for arresting HILTON was a dangerous job, in the performance of which it would have been easy to get killed.

How Did They Get That Way?

Another police episode deserving comment involves the five young men who shot and killed the Long Island restaurant keeper, MAHAIRAS. The capture of that gang was also the result of good detective work. The members of the group were brought to trial with reasonable promptness; after proceedings of only reasonable length, the boy who did the actual killing was convicted of murder in the first degree; and the other four took, on the advice of their counsel, the one way of escaping death in the chair—confession of murder in the second degree. At once they were sentenced to prison for twenty years—which means about thirteen years if they have the sense to be "good" prisoners.

That ends the case, so far as the police and the law are concerned, and to the credit of both. It is not necessary to regret that all five of the boys are not going to the chair, as all five of them certainly deserve to do under a strict application of the statute which makes principals of the accomplices in a murder. Possibly the full rigor of the law would have had a good effect on other boys, and possibly it would have done nothing of the kind.

There has been, seemingly, no very deep scrutiny of the lineage, environment and education, or its lack, that brought the careers of these boys to a termination so wretched. It was not poverty that drove them to crime or any definite grievance against society. Their relatives seem to be respectable. They need explanation quite as much as they need punishment.

Two Mishaps to the Chiropractors.

On the same day that the State Senate defeated the bill providing for the registration of chiropractors on proof of meeting certain educational requirements, fifteen followers of "physiotherapy" were haled into court here in New York and held in $500 bail for examination. What will happen to them later remains to be seen, but such evidence as served as basis for the charges on which they were arraigned showed that they have been doing what has been illegal and what the Senate decided should continue to be illegal.

No doubt they will be able to present witnesses willing to swear to having received benefits from their unconvenanted ministrations—usually after "the regular doctors had failed to cure." And probably, in some instances, this testimony will be true. There are maladies for which such manipulations as the chiropractors give are effectual, and in still more numerous cases the chiropractors can exercise a power of suggestion that does the business when only suggestion is needed. There will be no witnesses, at least for the defense, to tell of aggravations of illness they may have caused by manipulations not directed by knowledge.

What such folk as these want is to practice medicine without giving the time and paying the money that a real medical profession requires. If only they would get that, they could manipulate all they wanted to.

Myth-Makers Will Be Offended.

It was rather startling to have Dr. JAMES SULLIVAN, Assistant Commissioner of Education and former State Historian, in addressing the Columbia students, say that between the methods of the Soviet Government and those followed by the Committee of Correspondence in our own Revolutionary era there were similarities far more marked than most of us ever noticed, or would like to admit if we had done so. The similarities are there, however, and visible enough when attention is called or forced to them.

But Dr. SULLIVAN, though an advocate of what he called the "debunking of American history," also had a word of deserved reproof for the very modern historians who have been so impressed by the dark spots in our annals that they can see none of the more numerous and larger areas of glory. The Puritans had their trying qualities, judged by the standards of today, but whoever seeks their monuments can find them by looking almost anywhere in the country which they did so much to found and inspire. As Dr. SULLIVAN said, the debunkers themselves wouldn't be the worse for a little debunking. Half the truth never is the truth.

CONGRESS AND PROHIBITION

An Argument That the Federal Statute Alone Can Define 'Intoxicating.'

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your editorial of today entitled "The World's Laughing-Stock," you intimate that in my criticism of the proposed referendum asking Congress to rewrite the Volstead act so as to permit the law of the respective States to define "intoxicating liquors" I failed to consider the possibility that Congress might refuse to define that term and thereby transfer the problem to the States severally. It happens that that was the subject to which I devoted my attention in large measure. It is regrettable that you failed to observe that the Supreme Court of the United States had decided in the national prohibition cases that this was the very thing that could not be done by Congress.

Chief Justice White, dealing with the proposition which you now advance as apparently novel, made it entirely clear that the purpose of the prohibition amendment was to make it universally and uniformly operative and efficacious, that the duty was cast upon Congress not only of defining the prohibited beverages but also of enacting such regulations and sanctions as were essential to make the amendment operative as defined, and that the second section of the amendment conferring concurrent power upon Congress and the several States to enforce prohibition simply manifested the purpose to adjust the exercise of the new powers cast upon Congress to the dual system of government existing under the Constitution. This statement was followed by the sententious remark:

> "In other words, dealing with the new prohibition created by the Constitution, operating throughout the length and breadth of the United States, without reference to State lines or the distinction between the State and Federal power, and contemplating the exercise by Congress of the duty cast upon it to make the prohibition efficacious, it was sought by the second section to unite national and State administrative agencies in giving effect to the amendment and the legislation of Congress enacted to make it completely operative."

To say, therefore, that Congress may abdicate its power and duty and delegate it to the States so that they may determine what are "intoxicating liquors," flies in the very face of the Constitution and of the interpretation given to it by the Supreme Court. Your editorial fails to take into account the change wrought by the amendment in our governmental system in so far as the subject of prohibition is concerned. When the Legislatures of more than three-fourths of the States, including this, the Empire State, ratified the Eighteenth Amendment, local self-government as to "intoxicating liquors," including the power of definition, ceased to exist. It has been said that judgment subverting local self-government went by default. That may be true. At every session of Congress similar efforts are being made in which the several States, the press, politicians and statesmen supinely acquiesce. I am not aware that at the critical period when the prohibition amendment was under consideration the important journals of the country, including those of New York, made the slightest objection to its adoption. It is idle, therefore, now when it is too late, to advance theories of government which were either negligently or deliberately abandoned. For the electorate of New York to ask Congress to violate the Constitution and to ignore the decision of our highest court will, I repeat, render us "the laughing-stock of the world."

LOUIS MARSHALL.

New York, April 15, 1926.

I WILL NOT HASTEN.

I will not hasten my feet
Upon the road.
I will not run a breathless way
Seeking an end.
I will not pluck the fruit
On the high bough,
Nor cup the water in too eager hands,
For thirst and hunger.

If I do so, what shall it profit me?
Shall I not be
As one come early to his Winter time,
Fallen too soon on sleep?

The gathered corn leaves but a husk behind;
And when my hands are filled
With jeweled things
I cannot reach for stars.

I tell you, too,
The bird upon the bush,
And the bird's song,
Will drown in silence
If I cage it in.

All the small chattels of the little day
Confront me in my time.
I cannot stay
Among their trinketings.
I will not have a soul grown fat with food.
I will go light,
A meagre scrip within my purse.
I like the taste of hunger and desire.
A draught of thirst and longing
Is my cup.
Leave me the dream!
I would not seek the hour of its fulfilment.
Dreaming is enough, and sweet enough for me.
And from its wings
No shadow ever falls
On broken things.

ART IN INDUSTRY.

Products of Machines Now Shown in Museums.

By JOHN COTTON DANA.

The Metropolitan Museum of New York has opened its doors to the products of American machines and thus takes up the long deferred work of promoting design in industry.

It entered this part of the museum field only a few years ago in a modest and even timid way when it established in 1917 an annual series of small displays of American factory products. These displays were selected carefully from articles which owed their special form and ornamentation to the study of applied art objects, on which the museum had placed the seal of its approval by acquiring them and publicly displaying them.

The camel of the factory-made object having thrust his nose into the house of high art pushed himself further in. After seven years of exhibits of applied art objects which were guaranteed to be of high museum lineage, these annual displays were broadened in scope and were permitted to be made up of selections from the whole range of the factory-made in this country. In 1922 a gift was accepted by the museum of certain funds which were to be expended in the purchase of things produced by mechanic-artisans in these present days.

This is a far greater revolution—rather it is a far longer step forward for the Metropolitan—than it may seem. The managers of museums of fine art are almost all of one mind as to the supreme importance of acquiring and displaying museum pieces and museum pieces only. To illustrate: It is enough to check the acquisition by a fine art museum of a piece of pottery by a living artisan, working in an active factory, to say that "it can be seen in a department store"; the Pittsburgh Carnegie Museum a few years ago set up in its galleries a loan exhibit of the life, habits and products of the Chins of today; and then reverence for the old, rare and costly overcame its curators and the exhibit was taken down before it was opened to the people of Pittsburgh and declined as "not worthy"; in Cleveland a fine art museum building was opened a few years ago with a loan exhibit of objects of great auction value, not one of which could be said to have a relation of immediate helpfulness to any of the thousands of makers of the applied art objects which have made the city what it is; in Detroit the museum now being erected at the cost of several millions is to contain, we are told, only masterpieces—meaning objects that have no immediate relation to the problems and activities of the thousands of factory workers or to the hundreds of factory owners in that city.

One of the reasons for the steady growth in the Metropolitan of the faith that it is proper, wise and helpful for a museum of art in America to promote art in America was the appointment about seven years ago of Richard F. Bach as "liaison officer." Mr. Bach's interpretation of his duties led him to an intensive propaganda to the general effect that while American manufacturers are of excellent intent and are improving in art quality their several outputs, the museum's liaison officer can help them to get into helpful relations with a vast store of impeccable designs to be found in and on the Metropolitan's ancient, rare and costly objects.

In the early years he took his main thesis from the long-established attitude of the Metropolitan, an attitude assumed also by most of the lesser fine art and museum-piece institutions of the country, and asserted that if an artist wishes to produce for factory objects designs of unquestioned merit he must draw his inspiration and basic ideas from objects in the Metropolitan and museums of like character. He put his exhortation even more plainly by saying in effect that the only truly good design is the old design. To this a doubting Thomas hesitatingly said that if we grant that all good design is old design we must ask whence came in those old days when perfectly designed things were made the inspiration and guidance for their supreme excellence. And why here we find excellence in the paddles and shields and spears of the South Sea Islander and in the pottery, jade and drawings of the Chinese, who never had access to the riches of any American storehouse of museum pieces?

We find now in public prints, and more especially in trade papers, many of Mr. Bach's appeals to manufacturers to taste of the Metropolitan's Pierian spring. Our foremost and most conservative museum is committed to the gospel of the promotion of art in America by giving to American made products the opportunity to rise to the dignity and importance of museum pieces.

In 1913 the Metropolitan was given an opportunity to display an excellent collection of modern applied art objects. The offer was declined on the ground that the objects were commercial. In fact, they were. They were selected by Mr. Osthaus, a wealthy amateur of art, donor of a museum of art to his old town, Hagen, and the most active official of a German organization, the Werkbund. This group of artists, craftsmen, manufacturers and distributors, founded about 1906, had been of no small influence in the astonishing development in Germany of both fine and applied arts. This collection was shown first in Newark and then in half a dozen other large cities. It included several thousand objects in more than a score of quite distinct fields of manufacture. It was in many ways distinctly prophetic of the modern changes in all the arts from textiles to etchings and from wood-carving to porcelain.

It was new to America, distinctly so. The development of the new thought of Germany in the field of designs which it disclosed had already been noted by the French, who discovered early in this century that as compared with Germany's progress they had been marking time in the applied arts for nearly half a century. The French bestirred themselves and planned for an international exhibit in Paris about 1915, at which they purposed to show the world that their place as leaders in the arts had been regained. The war postponed this exhibit. It finally appeared as the Exhibit of the Decorative Arts of last year. Objects based on the work of the past were declared barred from display. This declaration could not, of course, be carried out in all its fullness. But the challenge was by this exhibition definitely thrown down to the assumption that age and time's approval are the last words in design.

The modern idea of the relation of art to the machine, largely developed of necessity and fostered by and through the Werkbund in Germany, had made long strides since 1900; for the Paris exhibition was most definitely an exaltation of the machine and a plain demonstration of the fact that the factory may be and in these times must be a handmaid of the arts.

In Germany, for now some forty years, the interest in all the arts has been intense. That interest led to a great productive activity and ultimately and quite inevitably to a full-hearted study of possibilities of growth. This in turn led to a frank trial of the new in many directions. Efforts to produce what was at once new and good were often failures. But that their artists, designers, craftsmen, mechanics and manufacturers affected greatly the art of today is beyond question. That a display of their work in 1912 was refused admission by our leading museum of art, and that a display which is in no small measure the very child of that movement is now welcomed by the Metropolitan—this is quite worthy of record.

In England is a Design in Industries Association, born a few years ago of the need that the products of English manufacturers be improved in their design that they may compete successfully with like products of Germany, France, Austria and other European countries. The conferences and publications of this association have been helpful in many ways. A similar organization could be of the greatest aid to the wider appreciation of good design and a consequent improvement in the applied arts in this country. A preliminary inquiry, looking to the formation of an association for the improvement of design in industry and for an unprejudiced study of what our factories produce today, has received, from scores of individuals and organizations with applied art interests, words of approval and proffers of cooperation. There are no insuperable obstacles to the coming of greater interest in, more careful and more adept criticism of and more generous appreciation of the products of American machines. Our machines can produce objects as cleverly designed as are those coming from other countries. This is demonstrated by the fact that our machines find no difficulty in copying the designs which come to us in our applied art imports. Native talent we have in abundance. Appreciation in the form of practical patronage would call that talent into use. The Metropolitan has followed the trend of the day by its admission of the American machine-made to its galleries.

Versailles and Lausanne.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read with unusual interest your careful analysis of the controversy over the Lausanne Treaty. It was grateful reading, yet my gratitude would have been heightened had you gone a step further and drawn a comparison between our attitude toward this treaty and the famous Versailles Treaty. In the latter instance we were confronted by the utter prostration and economic collapse of our allies, and because we made some concessions to their tortured frame of mind in exchange for a far greater and more ideal thing transcending any treaty, the makers thereof were destroyed politically by an unthinking and misinformed populace. As a result of that repudiation we had later to deal with a half-civilized nation whose power and affrontery were largely due to our desertion of our allies. And what humiliating concessions did our Secretary of State have to make them! Where was our articulate populace when we turned our faces against our solemn pledges and condemned to massacre hundreds of thousands of human beings we had sworn to protect?

We took a different stand with Germany. We insisted upon another treaty because of the iniquity of the Versailles one, yet demanding for ourselves everything contained therein pertaining to our advantage, but refusing to our allies a like privilege. Face to face with a half-barbarous murderer, we receded in our demands and proud America "took what she could get."

Why do we wonder that we are disliked? It seems human to dislike what we cannot understand. And is there any one who can possibly explain to Europe our attitude on the debt question, and why we are willing to accept a humiliating treaty at the dictation of a country like Turkey, but refuse to cooperate with our late allies in an effort to restore the world to a peaceful basis?

What has become of the ideals upon which our freedom rests? Perhaps in another world the founders of our Republic are asking themselves, Was the Spirit of '76 worth while?

Senator Caraway's Indictment.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The editorial article anent the address of Senator Caraway on President Coolidge and the selfish, shameful Administration attitude toward Europe seems purely one of courtesy. There is no answering the master's indictment. To any man not absolutely dominated by the Coolidge-Hoover idea of cornering the trade and wealth of the world this address will give great satisfaction. The tariff—any tariff—is most heavily a tax on the poor, yet it seems as much Coolidge obsession to lay on in the interest of our protected manufacturers, as Secretary Mellon's to untax wealth.

Senator Caraway is right. We are rapidly gaining the ill-will of the entire world. We have in the past month read press reports from London, Paris, Brussels, Amsterdam, even Prague, the tenor of which, as to our selfish Administration policy, is unanimous, and should tend to make would-be tourists stay at home, and those at home ashamed.

Summer Concerts.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It was with much joy that I read the announcement that the Goldman Band concerts were to be given at New York University again, and I am sure hundreds of thousands of others rejoice with me. I truly hope that the Guggenheims realize what a blessing they are bestowing upon the music-loving public. Many people seem to think some of these concerts in Central Park, but it really makes no difference where they are given as long as the public again will have the benefit of them.

BURBANK BURIED UNDER OLD CEDAR

LINDSEY GIVES EULOGY

Declares Horticulturist Was the Most Religious Man He Ever Knew.

SANTA ROSA, Cal., April 14 (AP).—The body of Luther Burbank, first citizen of Santa Rosa, lay beneath the sod tonight, with a cedar of Lebanon planted by the great horticulturist many years ago as a monument and headstone.

The burial was as simple as the daily routine in the cottage where Burbank lived and worked. No prayers were said aloud at his bier, and the stillness of evening in the home was unbroken by funeral orations.

Old friends and former fellow workers carried the casket to the grave from the room where Burbank died. A few words were spoken informally by close friends, a song was sung, and the body was lowered to its final resting place.

Elizabeth Burbank, the horticulturist's widow, and his sister, Mrs. Emma Beeson of Healdsburg, Cal., were the principle mourners. Besides these, only a chosen few of the oldest and closest friends of the family were at the grave.

Old Classmate at Funeral.

An unexpected and unannounced visitor at the burial was Marshall P. A. Albee of Berkeley, Cal., who was a classmate of Burbank in the Lancaster Academy of Massachusetts in 1868 and 1867.

The path from the Burbank home to the grave was lined with flowers that the hands and brain of the gardener of Santa Rosa transformed to a more beautiful state. A guard of Boy Scouts stood at attention while the casket was borne between their ranks.

In the funeral cortege were Mayor James Rolph Jr. of San Francisco, Dr. David Starr Jordan, Chancellor Emeritus of Stanford University; Mayor Charles O. Dunbar of Santa Rosa, Judge Rolfe Thompson of Sonoma County, Jerome O. Cross, Superintendent of Santa Rosa Public Schools, and Frank P. Doyle, a banker.

There was no procession through the Burbank home past the casket. No requiem music was arranged for the commitment to the grave. At the public exercises 3,000 school children sang and Judge Ben B. Lindsey of Denver, a life-long friend of Burbank, came here to deliver the eulogy. The Rev. C. S. S. Dutton of San Francisco, who married Mr. and Mrs. Burbank ten years ago, represented the church of which Burbank was a member but an admitted critic.

Defends Burbank's Beliefs.

The address delivered by Judge Lindsey at the public memorial was both a tribute and a defense of the horticulturist's religious beliefs.

"Luther Burbank was the most religious man I ever knew," Judge Lindsey said. "His war a real religion that actually works for human betterment—a religion that dares to challenge the superstitution, hypocrisy and sham that so often worked cruelties, inquisitions, wars and massacre.

"The prejudiced beneficiaries of organized theology, miscalled religion, refused to see that Burbank, the gifted child of nature, saw with a vision as crystal as theirs is dense and dark.

"And so they assailed him.

"It is impossible to estimate the wealth he has created that has been given generously to the world. Unlike inventors, or workers in other fields, no patent rights were given him, nor did he seek a monopoly in what he did. Had that been the case, Luther Burbank would have been the world's richest man. As it is, the world has been richer because of him, and in this he found a joy and satisfaction that no millions of money could give him.

"Luther Burbank lives forever in the myriad fields of strengthened grain, in the new forms of fruits and flowers and plants and vines and trees, and, above all, in the newly-watered gardens of the human mind, where shall spring human freedom from those earthly fields that shall drive out gods, false and brutal."

Ford Tells of Burbank's Belief.

DETROIT, April 14.—Luther Burbank was not an infidel nor a disbeliever in the permanence of the human spirit, in the opinion of Henry Ford, who expressed today his great admiration for Burbank.

Today, while the gardener of Santa Rosa was being laid to rest, denounced by some as a disbeliever in the reality of the Divine, yet over whose casket the pastor of the church of which Burbank was a member commended his spirit to the God in whom Burbank really believed, his friend, Mr. Ford, reaffirmed his conviction that Luther Burbank was in no sense an infidel.

"His statement of his religious views was either grossly misunderstood or misquoted by the press," Mr. Ford said.

"I knew him well, visited him a number of times and frequently talked with him about the life of plants, of flowers and of the entities which make up our world and ourselves. I know positively that there was in Luther Burbank a beautiful and abiding faith in the permanence of that which now lives, whatever form it may take, here or hereafter, and whatever function it may perform in what we call the world of matter." He believed that no life was ever lost.

"His religious and philosophical ideas were expressed in his own way, of course," Mr. Ford said, "and his way was chiefly the way of taking the living things at hand and by his creative genius and devotedly patient work making them into different combinations of life, with more service and beauty to the world.

"If he could not endorse the particular conception of the Deity and of the human spirit which some others held, it was perhaps because he had thought more deeply than some others had, or had approached the problem from a different angle. But he certainly was not an infidel in the sense of denying the ruling intelligence and power back of all things. I think that his faith was so great and so firm that he did not feel the need of being overpositive about things he could not scientifically prove."

EMPLOYMENT RISES IN MOST INDUSTRIES

Federal Report Shows Change From February and Calls Outlook Bright.

MAJOR TRADES ARE STEADY

Industrial Conditions Are Declared Better In New York City and State.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—A slight decrease from the unemployment that was apparent at the close of February is shown by reports received by the employment service of the Department of Labor. The demand for all classes of labor as reported considerably increased in the last few days of March, largely due to improved weather conditions, and the forecast of conditions in the present month was favorable.

"The industrial employment outlook for April," the survey said, "is decidedly bright. Optimism prevails in practically every industry. Building construction will show a further increase. Preparations are being made for considerable city and county improvement work, large State road programs and for greater activity in agricultural districts."

The survey shows that employment in the major industries has been comparatively steady during the last thirty day. Most of the xtile mills, except those in New Jersey, it was said, are operating on a full-time basis. A slight increase in employment occurred in the boot and shoe industry, more pronounced in the New England factories.

Anthracite Workers Increased.

"A very satisfactory volume of employment is being maintained in the iron and steel industry," the survey continues. "This is also true of the automobile factories and plants manufacturing automobile accessories. Forces engaged in the mining of anthracite were increased slightly during the month, but employment fell off in the bituminous coal fields.

"Building construction has increased in practically every section of the country. There is a general shortage throughout the country of agricultural help, experienced in practical farm work, for yearly employment. The demand for seasonal farm help is steadily increasing."

In dealing with conditions in New York State the survey says that the employment situation is reported as satisfactory in most basic industries. There was a curtailment of production and employment in some plants and factories during March, but this was offset by expansion in other lines. No marked decline in industrial employment is expected during April.

A pronounced increase in building and construction, an upward trend in most automobile plants, in iron and steel mills and in electrical industries and increased orders for railroad equipment and machinery have stimulated the demand for skilled mechanics, and a shortage of this class of labor is reported in several cities.

Employment in the metal and machine industries and allied trades increased during March. All classes of skilled labor are needed in these lines. All classes of building trades men are being engaged, and large numbers of unskilled workers have been absorbed on work now under way. A steady increase in the demand for skilled and unskilled building and construction labor is assured during the next few months.

To Absorb Common Labor.

Satisfactory employment conditions obtain in the freight division of the railroads, transportation lines and repair shops. Operations in the iron and steel industries, particularly in the Western tier, are averaging a high rate of activity, with all classes of mill and plant labor well employed. With the advent of Spring weather practically all surplus common labor will be absorbed on building and construction and on agricultural work.

The situation in New York City also is dealt with in the survey. Employment, it is reported, increased there slightly during March, and no downward trend in industrial employment conditions is expected in the next thirty days. Manufacturing industries with but few exceptions are operating at a fairly high rate. The metal and machinery plants report a shortage of tool and die makers, screw machine operators and first-class machinists.

A seasonal decrease is noted in plants manufacturing radio sets and parts. At the close of the month the usual seasonal slowing down in clothing factories was apparent, and no change in this condition is looked for in the next few weeks.

Building activity advanced rapidly during the last part of March. Work has begun on a number of large projects, and more construction, aggregating an expenditure of $75,814,500, will be under way during the next thirty to sixty days. The supply of building trades men is practically absorbed, and a shortage of this class of labor is expected during the next few weeks.

Much City Work Planned.

A large amount of subway construction work is under way, and with the advance of Spring a program of municipal improvements aggregating several million dollars, including paving, street widening and sewer and water lines extensions, will provide employment to thousands of skilled and unskilled men. Automobile accessory and assembly plants are employing additional help, and repair shops are calling for skilled mechanics.

Excepting seasonal unemployment, the skilled and unskilled labor supply is fully employed, and the outlook for the next thirty days is entirely satisfactory.

Union League Club Gets Collection.

A gift to the Union League Club of a collection of antique Oriental porcelains, bronzes, iridescent glass and Chinese pottery from Thomas B. Clarke, is acknowledged in the 1926 Year Book of the club, issued yesterday. The collection fills nine glass cabinets in an art gallery at the club. A bronze tablet has been inserted in the largest cabinet telling of Mr. Clarke's gift.

City College to Mark Founding.

The seventy-ninth anniversary of the founding of City College will be celebrated on Charter Day, fixed this year for Thursday, May 27. The central event will be the unveiling of a bronze bust of Adolph Lewisohn in the stadium which was given by him to City College. Charter Day actually falls on May 7, but is celebrated in the latter part of the month because of more favorable weather conditions.

From the Founder's Writings

"No! I cannot go with you to the store. I cannot leave my kitten for fear she would be lonesome."

Bless the dear little motherly soul, who quickly put her kitten into a basket and tripped out with it on her arm to tramp alongside of her grandmother.

The love and company of little birds or animals, by little or big, tends to gentleness and kindness in forming character, to say nothing of what it does for the dumb creature.

Let it be known far and wide that every one, little or large, is welcome to this place, where there is so much to see and where nobody can be lonesome or not feel at home.

BARGE CANAL SALE TO PASS AT ALBANY

TWO SMITH BILLS KILLED

VOTE CITY COURT PAY RISE

Senators Concur in Measure Allowing $18,000 to Presiding Justice and $17,500 to Associates.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 14.—A concurrent resolution sponsored by Assemblyman Bloch, Democratic leader of the Assembly, and Senator Pitcher, Republican, of Watertown, proposing an amendment to the Constitution to permit the State to cede or sell the Barge Canal to the Federal Government for use as a part of an all-American ship canal from Oswego to the Atlantic, was favorably reported today by the Assembly Rules Committee.

The proposal has the approval of Governor Smith. It was advocated by Colonel Frederick Stuart Greene, State Superintendent of Public Works, when he submitted his annual report to the Legislature some weeks ago. In this report Colonel Greene said that the Barge Canal had been a failure and that the State ought to turn it over to the Federal Government for a ship canal. In transmitting the report to the lawmakers the Governor said that he approved the recommendation.

Because the resolution is bi-partisan, it is generally believed that it will be rushed through both houses early next week. Before it can be submitted to the voters it will have to be approved by the Legislature of 1927.

Colonel Greene's recommendation that the canal be turned over to the Federal Government raised a storm of protest from the Canal Operators' Association, who contended that Colonel Greene had never tried to build up the waterway.

Film Censorship Stays.

Despite the fact that there is every indication that final adjournment of the 1926 session will be taken a week from Friday, comparatively short sessions were held in both the Senate and Assembly today. Senator Knight during the course of a debate said in an offhand way that the leaders hoped to adjourn sine die by April 23.

Motions by Assemblyman Bloch to discharge the Rules Committee from further consideration of two bills carrying out recommendations made by Governor Smith were defeated in the lower house by a party vote, 90 Republicans voting against discharge and 50 Democrats in favor of it.

The first motion was to bring the bill sponsored by Assemblyman Hackenburg, Democrat, of Manhattan, repealing the motion picture censorship law, out of committee.

"Some people," said Mr. Hackenburg," want us to become a nation of sour faces. They think all fun is the work of the devil and that everything must be censored. The people are the best censors, because if a motion picture is not what it ought to be the producer will know it in mighty quick time. We cannot enact morality into people."

"I do not believe that the penal law is in such form now that the censorship law should be repealed," said Mr. Davison, Republican, of Nassau. "What we ought to do is to strengthen the penal law and then wipe the censorship law off the statute books."

"Children are not able to judge for themselves what kind of pictures they should see and for that reason the present law should not be repealed" said Mr. Jenks, father of the dry enforcement bill.

Advertising on Danger Signals.

The second motion lost was on the bill of Assemblyman Steingut, Democrat, of Manhattan, which would abolish the present Council of Farms and Markets and substitute a single-headed commission, the commissioner to be appointed by the Governor. At present members of the Farms and Market Council are elected by the Legislature.

The Assembly passed the bill sponsored by Senator Fearon and Assemblyman Smith, Republican, of Syracuse, permitting advertisements on danger signals in public highways. Mr. Smith said the practice has been permitted in other States with good results. He believed many big advertisers would be glad to furnish danger signals for the public highways if they were permitted to use part of the signals for advertisements. The measure now goes to Governor Smith.

The Senate passed the bill of Assemblyman Goodrich, Republican, of Westchester, providing that prison sentences cannot be reduced, either by compensation or commutation, to less than one year. The measure now goes to the Governor.

Two hearings on bills will be held by Governor Smith in the Executive Chamber next Monday. One will be on a measure providing for the elimination of railroad grade crossings in New York City. The other will be on a measure permitting the City of Syracuse to extend its boundaries.

The Senate concurred with the Assembly in passing the Dineen bill increasing the salaries in the City Court to $18,000 for the Presiding Justice and $17,500 for Associate Justices. This bill now goes to the Governor.

TOOK FALSE TEETH FOR RING

St. Paul Youth Escapes With Set in Argument Over Return of Gem.

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 14 (AP).—When Miss Rose Zwerisckl refused to give up his diamond ring, Bartholomew Nathaniel Xonoydas took her false teeth and kept them, he explained in court today.

Xonoydas was brought into court on a replevin action by Miss Zwerisckl, who sought to recover her teeth. She has not been able to eat much for two weeks, she said, and has stayed at home during that time because of her appearance.

During an argument about the ring, Xonoydas told the Court, Miss Zwerisckl's teeth fell to the ground and he felt that he had a right to keep them until she returned his ring.

Tacks in Shoe Plant Ashes Cause Flat Tire Epidemic

NORTH GRAFTON, Mass., April 14 (AP).—For the last few weeks hundreds of automobile owners have been bothered by flat tires caused by tacks and were at a loss as to where they were picking them up.

The mystery is solved. When the sidewalks and streets were slippery last Winter ashes from a shoe factory were used and as a result the streets were literally covered with tacks.

Fred L. Atchue, who has been watching the roads carefully, while crossing East Street today noticed a few tacks and, on investigation, found a large number. He reported the incident to the Selectmen and when the street was swept more than seven pounds of tacks were picked up.

FINDS WOMAN HELD IN HOSPITAL FOR BILL

Louis Deutsch of 345 East Ninety-fourth Street, a worker in a slipper factory, complained to Magistrate Weil in Harlem Court yesterday morning that officials of Flower Hospital, Avenue A and Sixty-fourth Street, had refused since last Saturday to discharge his wife, Mrs. Gussie Deutsch, because of his inability to pay her hospital bill.

Magistrate Weil telephoned to the hospital where, he said, Deutsch's charge was admitted. Following the conversation the Magistrate told Deutsch he had informed the hospital authorities that they had no right to hold Mrs. Deutsch as a lien and that if money was due them they might recover in a civil suit.

Later in the day Deutsch went to the hospital for his wife and took her home in a taxicab.

Officials at the hospital declared there was no truth in Deutsch's story. Auditor J. M. Lavelle said that at no time had Flower Hospital held any one for the payment of a bill. The bill against Mrs. Deutsch, he asserted, had been paid Tuesday by the patient's stepmother and evidently without Deutsch's knowledge. He said that Deutsch must have misunderstood the situation when the hospital pressed for settlement of the bill.

HELD AS MURDERER OF RIVAL FOR A GIRL

Man Is Accused of Using Hammer to Kill Vito Russo to Keep Him From Party.

Charged with the murder of his rival for the hand of a young Italian girl, Santo Cunno, 30 years old, of 194 North Ninth Street, Brooklyn, was arraigned before Magistrate Earl Smith in the Essex Market Court, yesterday, and held without bail for the Grand Jury. It is alleged that he beat Vito Russo on the head with a hammer late last Friday night. Russo died in the Gouverneur Hospital on Sunday.

Russo was engaged to be married to Concetta Libertini of 12 Hamilton Street, and the wedding was to have taken place this week. When Russo failed to appear at a party at his fiancée's house she asked his friends to look for him, and Domenic Nuccio, his roommate, found him in their room at 187 Forsyth Street with his head crushed.

Suspicion fell upon Cunno and he was arrested on Monday. The police said that there was a trail of footprints in the room where Russo was killed and that Cunno was wearing a new pair of shoes when he was arrested. A search of his home failed to reveal any other shoes.

ARMY CARRIER PIGEONS MAKE 189-MILE FLIGHT

FORT MONMOUTH, N. J., April 14.—Eight of twelve homing pigeons, released this morning from the munitions building in Washington, reached their destination here late this afternoon. It was believed that the four missing birds might arrive during the night.

The pigeons, owned by the United States Signal Corps, which has a training station here, were released at ten-minute intervals, the first getting away at 10 o'clock. They encountered strong headwinds, making the flight extremely difficult for the entire 189 miles.

"General Pershing" was the first bird to reach here, covering the distance in five hours and twenty minutes. The eighth bird arrived at 5:52.

BOY KILLED BY TRUCK.

Another Truck Fractures Woman's Skull—Two Hurt in Jersey.

Salvatore Bellaratta, 5 years old, of 177 Sackman Street, Brooklyn, was killed yesterday by a motor truck near his home. Witnesses told the police the boy stumbled as he ran to catch a ball and fell under one of the rear wheels of the truck. Louis Markowitz, the driver, was arrested on a technical charge of homicide.

Mrs. Josephine Tschinder, 53 years old, of 1,485 Second Avenue, was struck by a motor truck at Second Avenue and Seventy-seventh Street yesterday morning. Her skull was fractured and she was injured internally. Patrolman Dick arrested the driver of the truck, Abraham Kosminsky, 23 years old, of 640 Alabama Avenue, Brooklyn. Dick said Kosminsky did not stop after the accident, and he had to pursue him for several blocks. Kosminsky, employed by the Progress Cable Company of 278 Newport Avenue, Brooklyn, said he did not know his vehicle had struck the woman.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 14.—Two persons were taken to Atlantic City Hospital tonight, suffering from fractured skulls received when a touring car in which they were riding turned over twice on the New York road four miles south of Tuckerton. They said they were James J. Hudson, 41, of 103 Myrtle Street, Irvington, and Mrs. Helen Hattan, 33, East Orange.

The accident occurred when Hudson, the driver, attempted to pass another automobile.

DR. HARRIS ASSAILS POULTRY PERMITS

Says Predecessors Sanctioned 30 Slaughter Houses That Violate Law on Sites.

ASKS RULING ON HIS POWERS

Is Told That He Must Issue Permits Already Approved—He Does So and Starts Investigation.

Dr. Louis I. Harris, Commissioner of Health, investigating conditions in his department, turned his attention yesterday to poultry slaughter houses and asked the Corporation Counsel's office to rule on his powers. He charged that approval of sites and plans was given by the Health Department last year in more than thirty instances when the law was being violated as to the size of the proposed buildings or location of sites.

The law requires that a slaughter house have at least 1,500 square feet of space, but approval was given to plans that called for only 900 square feet, Dr. Harris said. Some sites were located near tenement houses, theatres or public schools and were approved, he asserted. In a decision from the Corporation Counsel's office Dr. Harris was notified that he must issue permits when the city had officially approved plans and sites. This decision was said to be based on justice to applicants who had expended large sums for sites and plans, even though it now develops that the law did not sanction approval of them.

Dr. Harris officially opened an investigation into the situation when he conferred with nine applicants affected by his previous order refusing permits. He said last night he had no evidence of official irregularity and that permits would be issued. He emphasized, however, that he had not readily acquiesced and that with each permit would be a written stipulation "that the methods employed in the operation of said slaughter houses are to be so devised as to eliminate offensive odors, also the scattering of offensive material or the creation of noise of such character as to be a public health nuisance."

Dr. Harris issued the following order to the Deputy Commissioner in charge of the issuing of permits:

"It is not my desire to condemn or sanction conditions associated with such poultry slaughter houses which are inimical to public health, but a vicious heritage has been handed down to us from the preceding administration. It will have to be dealt with in a just way. Repugnant as it is to grant temporary permits to poultry slaughter houses in places where they have no excuse for being, we will, nevertheless, have to do so because the Board of Health last year committed itself to a virtual pact to approve their operation in giving the owners approval of site and plans.

"We will give temporary permits to these places where owners have invested large sums of money, with the understanding that they are provisional permits and that the stipulation is clearly made that we shall watch keenly and constantly when they begin operations to detect anything offensive to the residents in the vicinity of such houses or injurious to health. Should the operation of these places cause any such conditions to arise a summary and instant revocation of the permit is to be made by the officers of the Health Department responsible for their inspection in the Bureau of Food and Drugs."

He has notified the Deputy Commissioner in charge of permits to issue permits to more than thirty men who obtained sites and drew plans which were approved last year, but which he says are not in conformity with the law. In 1925 more than 500 permits for the erection of such places were issued, he said, while thus far this year only two permits have been granted.

PROMOTES DETECTIVE WHO CAUGHT KOERBER

Detective Emil Mach of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station was promoted yesterday to first-grade detective, with an increase of $600 in salary, by Police Commissioner McLaughlin. Mach rounded up the youthful Koerber hold-up gang, the leader of which, 18-year-old Herbert Koerber, three days ago was convicted of first degree murder in Queens for the shooting and killing of Angel Mahairas, Jamaica restaurant owner, during a robbery. Four other members of the gang pleaded guilty to second degree murder the following day, and were sentenced to from twenty years' to life imprisonment each.

Mach was appointed to the force nine years ago. In 1920 he was transferred from uniformed patrol duty to the Detective Division, and soon after was raised to second-grade detective.

Mary and Kitty Kraus and Mrs. Nora Green, wife of one of the gang who pleaded guilty to participation in the Mahairas killing, were released yesterday by District Attorney Richard S. Newcombe of Queens as material witnesses in the Mahairas killing, but they immediately were arrested on warrants issued by Magistrate Harry A. Gordon in the Yorkville Court on March 27 last, charging them with suspicion of participating in two hold-ups on the east side.

They were taken to District Attorney Banton's office, but when the girls denied any knowledge of the robberies, detectives took them to the East Sixty-seventh Street Station, where they were placed in cells for arraignment this morning. They were reported to have been with members of the Koerber gang when a Chinese restaurant at Third Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street was held up on the night of March 11 and $100 and a gold watch and chain taken from the proprietors, Sing Long Low and Wong Do Sun. They also were accused of being present at the hold-up by members of the gang of a delicatessen store at Third Avenue and Eighty-third Street.

District Attorney Banton said that if concrete evidence is presented against the girls the case would be presented to the Grand Jury within the next week.

Bloomingdale Manager Honored.

Julius Bellman, General Manager of Bloomingdale Brothers department store, who started there as an office boy at $3 a week, was the guest of honor last night at a dinner at the store. Samuel J. Bloomingdale, Hiram C. Bloomingdale and Irving I. Bloomingdale, proprietors of the store, gave the dinner, which was followed by a theatre party.

British Banker Urges Extravagance Here To Counterbalance Thrift in Europe

Extravagance for the United States and thrift for England were urged here yesterday by Sir Robert Kindersley, an English banker, as a "necessary step in international progress."

Sir Robert, who is the senior partner of Lazard Brothers & Co., Ltd., of London and a director of the Bank of England, was speaking at the monthly luncheon of the Bond Club at the Bankers Club. He described how England's war savings system, which he helped inaugurate in 1916, had developed tremendous savings, with new savings associations being formed constantly in every part of the country.

"The campaign for economy and avoidance of needless luxuries is being carried forward and is bearing fruit," he continued. "We are careful to emphasize that by thrift we do not mean mere hoarding, but the accumulation of money that can be spent to advantage later. This economy is absolutely necessary in England. By it we accumulate money that we hope will enable England to increase her foreign loans, which will bring about larger exports of her products to many parts of the world.

"But while economy is necessary in England, just the opposite is the case in this country. If I were to shift my headquarters to New York, I should become a high priest of extravagance and preach the advantages of spending. For it is only by economy in Europe and extravagance in America that a proper adjustment can be made. It is by spending that your great industries were built up and are being maintained and money raised to enable Europe to expand her export trade, a necessary step in international progress."

Sir Robert also discussed the League of Nations, and said he thought the "profit and loss account of the League to date will show a heavy balance on the profit side."

THOUSANDS RUSH TO PAY STATE TAX

250,000 MUST PAY TODAY

ALBANY, April 14 (AP).—The army of income taxpayers who had put off until next to the last minute the filing of returns of their 1925 incomes began their march, by mail and in person, on the State Tax Department today. The time limit expires at midnight tomorrow and officials of the department assert that penalties are certain for those who fail to comply with the law.

Thousands of persons delayed paying their bill this year until Governor Smith had signed the measures increasing the exemptions and reducing the tax. These cuts in the revenue, it is estimated, will amount to nearly $14,000,000, and will mean that 350,000 persons who paid a tax last year will have nothing to pay for 1925. However, this will still leave 600,000 who must pay.

State officials familiar with the collection of the tax since its inception in 1919 assert that work is becoming easier as the public learns to play its part in the tremendous task. Although last year nearly 140,000 refunds had to be made because taxpayers had failed to allow for the 25 per cent. cut, experts said today that 83 per cent. of this year's taxpayers were allowing for both the reduction and the increased exemptions.

Fewer persons are requiring assistance in filling out their blanks, and more returns are being sent in by mail, either to headquarters in Albany or to the branch collection offices in New York City, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and Utica.

These offices were working under full pressure today as the first of the 250,000 returns still outstanding began to come in. The entire clerical force of the Albany bureau, augmented by scores of outside helpers, was pressed into service. Thirty-five sacks of mail awaited the tabulators when they reported for work, and many more were received during the day. Another heavy mail is expected tomorrow, while at least fifty sacks are expected on Friday morning.

Seventy-five clerks are busy opening the letters, removing the enclosures and sending them to the auditing department. Expert calculators inspect each return, setting aside those in which an error is found in order that the division may communicate with the careless mathematician. Auditors tabulate the receipts as fast as they come in, bundling the money orders, cash and checks for deposit.

Delinquents are far fewer than in the first years of the tax, officials say, although last year the Bureau of Investigation collected nearly $400,000 from persons who had failed to comply with the law. The decrease in the number of tax dodgers is ascribed to the careful check that is made by the State and to the certainty of the penalty levied on delinquents. Fines are laid on persons who fail to file returns by the specified date, and if no payment has been made in sixty days the amount of the tax due is doubled.

TROUT SEASON OPENS.

New Jersey Anglers Start Today—Catch Is Reduced to 15.

The trout fishing season opens in New Jersey this morning. It was predicted yesterday that by the end of the week more than 10,000 anglers would be whipping the streams throughout that State.

The New Jersey Fish Commissioner has reduced the number of trout allowed this year to each fisherman to fifteen a day. Last year the maximum was twenty-five. All fish under six inches in length must be cast back into the water.

The commission has released in the last few years from the Hacketts-town hatcheries more than 3,000,000 trout into streams throughout the State and indications are bright for good sport.

WHITTEMORE'S MAIL HOLDS SAW BLADES

NOTE SENT IN CIPHER CODE

BUFFALO, N. Y., April 14 (AP).—An attempt to smuggle two hack saw blades to Richard Reese Whittemore, robber gang leader, has been frustrated by Jailer Charles Leib, it became known today. The hack saws were concealed in a box of stationery which had been mailed, special delivery, in Buffalo.

Enclosed in the box was this note:

"Rich—Fondest regards and best wishes, from J. N. & S."

The note apparently was written in a feminine hand.

Whittemore is confined in the Erie County Jail here under heavy guard awaiting trial for the murder of two Bank of Buffalo employes in a $93,000 robbery here last October. Jail authorities and the police were uncertain whether the sending of the saws and the note was the work of a crank who has previously sent Whittemore jargon messages, or whether it was an actual attempt at jail delivery. District Attorney Guy B. Moore, however, was convinced the effort to send the saws to Whittemore was a serious attempt to aid the prisoner to escape. Moore said the reason a code note which seemed to be jargon, sent previously to the prisoner, had not been deciphered was because it was such a good code. He said it not the work of a crank as some supposed.

On receipt of news from Buffalo that an attempt had been made to smuggle saws into Richard Reese Whittemore's cell, Police Inspector John D. Coughlin, in command of the Detective Division here, asked the wardens of the Tombs and the West Side Prison to search the cells and clothing of the members of the Whittemore gang in prison here, and to take special precautions against any outside efforts to help them to escape.

Leon and Jacob Kraemer and Milton "Shuffles" Goldberg are prisoners in the Tombs, and Anthony Paladino and "Baltimore Willie" Unkelbach are in the West Side Prison. Paladino and Unkelbach, who have "squealed" on their pals, and have pleaded guilty to the Whittemore jewel robberies, were separated from the Kraemers and Goldberg, who have refused to "talk."

FINED FOR PROTEST IN COURT

Joseph Lieberman of 1,804 Washington Avenue, the Bronx, was arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct and fined $10 in the Coney Island Court yesterday by Magistrate Hirshfield when Lieberman loudly objected to a fine imposed on his employe, Samuel Grossman, of 1,781 Washington Avenue, the Bronx.

Grossman was arrested last Sunday on a charge of operating a bus at Coney Island without a hack license. His employer appeared in court with the license, but the Magistrate fined Grossman $10 because he failed to produce the license at the time of his arrest.

"I'm not getting a fair deal," shouted Lieberman. "I don't care about the $10 fine, I could pay $500, but I'm not getting a fair deal."

Steal $5,000 Furs Despite Alarm.

Furs valued at between $5,000 and $10,000 were stolen early yesterday from the Maynard Miller Company of 132 West Thirty-first Street by burglars who gained entrance to the ground floor shop by forcing the front door and worked in spite of the ringing of an automatic burglar alarm bell. The robbery was reported, the police said, by a milk wagon driver, whose name was not given. He said he saw four men pile the furs into an automobile and drive east on Thirty-first Street.

M'LAUGHLIN TO SIFT RADIO BURGLAR CASE

Big Detective Shake-Up Looms as He Seeks Cause of Failure of 30 to Catch Hilton.

PROMOTES THIEF'S CAPTORS

Besides promoting three Manhattan detectives and commending Inspector John D. Coughlin and Captain Edward M. Shelvey of Police Headquarters for the arrest of Paul E. Hilton, the radio burglar, Commissioner George V. McLaughlin yesterday ordered an investigation to find out why the thirty Queens detectives who had been assigned especially to hunt for the radio burglar had failed to find him, and why he had been able to continue his midnight robberies in the Woodhaven section in defiance of their search.

A shake-up of the entire Queens detective force may follow the investigation, it was reported at Police Headquarters. Commissioner McLaughlin was said to be as incensed at the failure of the Queens detectives to get results as he was pleased at the fine work done by the Headquarters men.

"We want to know if we slipped up in Queens," said the Commissioner, "and why we slipped up, if we did. We want to prevent a recurrence of it. That is the essential thing."

Blame Uniformed Men Also.

Officials at Headquarters think that the uniformed police in the Woodhaven section, as well as the detectives, have something to explain for the ability of the radio burglar to get away with his long series of thefts without capture for nearly three months. It was pointed out that all the burglaries were committed in the same general vicinity, within a half-mile radius of the Richmond Hill police station, all in the same type of small detached houses, and at about the same time—in the early morning hours. Another thing that has aroused displeasure at Headquarters is that Hilton, according to his confession, was able to carry such bulky objects as radio sets through the streets under his arm to the nearest subway station at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning and to take them to Manhattan for sale to fences without attracting the attention of policemen.

In the cases where the radio burglar was stopped by policemen searching for him, he always tricked them into thinking he was a policeman or a householder, and then shot them when they were off guard. This happened in two cases even after the Queens police had been warned that the man they were hunting was a dangerous criminal and was likely to shoot. Officials at headquarters think that Hilton carried his pistol in his sleeve and shot his victims as he was making a fake motion to put his hands up in the air. The fact that each of the four policemen he shot was wounded in the neck lends color to this theory.

Praises Inspector Coughlin.

Commissioner McLaughlin pointed out yesterday that the burglar might not have been caught for a long time had it not been for the excellent work of Inspector Coughlin, in command of the Detective Division and Captain Shelvey, in charge of the Bureau of Criminal Identification, who identified the suspect from his Rogues' Gallery record and deduced from his fondness for baseball that he could not keep away from the opening game of the season at the Polo Grounds.

The three detectives who arrested Hilton outside the Polo Grounds on Tuesday afternoon, after a struggle in which he attempted to shoot them, were promoted to first-grade rank by Commissioner McLaughlin yesterday in accordance with Inspector Coughlin's recommendation.

William A. Jackson of the Homicide Squad, who was a second-grade detective, will receive $600 a year extra pay because of his promotion. James A. Pyke, also of the Homicide Squad, and George F. Chiquette of the West 123d Street Station, who were third-grade detectives, will get an $800-a-year increase each. As first-grade detectives, their pay will be $3,300 a year each.

Jackson lives at 101 Lynn Avenue, Queens Village, and has been in the Police Department since 1912. Pyke, who lives at 575 Jamaica Avenue, Astoria, joined the department in 1921. Chiquette lives at 1,063 Gerard Avenue, the Bronx, and has been on the force since 1912.

Two Detectives Demoted.

Detectives Richard T. Siegert Jr. and John Mireau were demoted from third-grade detectives to uniformed patrol duty last Monday because they failed to capture Hilton on April 6, when he shot Detective Charles H. McCarthy within a few feet of them. The three detectives, in an automobile, were looking for the radio burglar, when they saw a man walking, at 2 A. M., at 135th Street and Eighty-seventh Avenue. They stopped the car, and McCarthy, getting out while Siegert and Mireau remained in their seats, accosted the suspect.

The burglar shot McCarthy in the neck while the detective was looking at an identification card Hilton had produced. Hilton ran and outdistanced Siegert and Mireau, who evidently did not pursue him very far, according to officials at Headquarters. Siegert was an inexperienced detective, who had been sent to the Detective Division on last Dec. 31 as one of the last acts of former Police Commissioner Enright's administration. Mireau had been a detective for three years.

Hilton in the Line-up.

Two hundred masked detectives viewed Hilton in the line-up at Police Headquarters yesterday morning, while Inspector Coughlin recited the crimes he had committed. Milton Reiff, proprietor of the Star Radio Shop at 134 Third Avenue, who admits he bought the stolen radio sets from Hilton for a few dollars apiece, also was in the line-up.

"This man," said Inspector Coughlin, pointing to Reiff, "is a worse criminal than Hilton."

Inspector Coughlin said detectives had called on Reiff Saturday and Tuesday, before Hilton was caught, and had shown him circulars with the radio burglar's photograph and description, but that Reiff had denied knowing him. At the same time, Inspector Coughlin went on, Reiff had eleven of the stolen radio sets in his shop.

When Hilton was arrested he identified Reiff as the man to whom he had sold not only the radio sets, but also other stolen articles, including silverware, jewelry, fountain pens, &c. The police said Reiff had admitted melting down half of the silverware he bought from the burglar.

Reiff said he paid Hilton $10 for a stolen violin because he "wanted to take violin lessons," according to the police.

Handcuffed to detectives, Hilton was taken to Queens by Captain Arthur Carey, in charge of the Homicide Squad. In the presence of representatives of the Queens District Attorney's office, the police and the prisoner reconstructed the murder of Patrolman Arthur Kenny and the shooting of three other policemen at the places where these crimes occurred. Hilton also pointed out to the authorities the various houses that he had robbed and showed them how he committed his burglaries and how he got away.

No Bail Set, Hearing Tomorrow.

Arraigned before County Judge Frank F. Adel in Long Island City yesterday afternoon on a charge of homicide, Hilton was remanded to the county jail without bail for a hearing tomorrow. The court house steps and the park in front of the building were crowded when Hilton arrived, guarded by three automobiles full of detectives. Detective Charles H. McCarthy, whom Hilton shot in the neck on April 6, was with the party. McCarthy signed a short affidavit on which the burglar was held, charging him with shooting Patrolman Kenny in the neck on March 25 and causing the wounds from which Kenny died on April 6.

Hilton was locked in the Queens County Court House last night. District Attorney Richard S. Newcomb of Queens said the evidence in the Kenny murder would be presented to the Grand Jury at Long Island City next Tuesday, and that if an immediate indictment was returned Hilton would be arraigned in County Court next Wednesday. In that case, he added, the trial probably would begin on Monday, April 26.

Reiff was arraigned in the Yorkville Court yesterday and was held by Magistrate Albert H. Vitale in $25,000 bail for a hearing tomorrow on the charge of criminally receiving stolen goods. He said he was 33 years old and lived at 201 East Fourteenth Street.

Had Record in Newport.

Dispatches from Newport, R. I., yesterday said that Hilton had a criminal record there. He was sent to Newport during the war to attend the naval training station, and was arrested early on the morning of June 7, 1918, when Patrolman Samuel H. Dugan caught him robbing a tailor shop on Thames Street. He tried to shoot Dugan, but the policeman took the gun away and knocked him down. Hilton was sent to jail, but the navy got possession of him on a writ of habeas corpus and put him in the brig for violation of naval regulations.

He escaped from the naval training station, but returned to Providence on March 31, 1921, and was arrested at the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A. He was then sentenced to five years in the Cranston (R. I.) prison for breaking into Stone Villa, a Summer residence near Providence, and for the 1918 tailor shop burglary. He was paroled from Cranston some months ago.

BLAMES HOSPITAL FOR DEATH.

Hilton Victim Got Poor Treatment in Jamaica, Social Worker Says.

Mrs. Rose Haas, a social worker, charged yesterday that lack of proper treatment of Patrolman Arthur Kenny at the Mary Immaculate Hospital, Jamaica, was the cause of his death. Kenny was shot in the neck by Paul Hilton, the radio burglar, in Queens on March 25, and died in Post-Graduate Hospital, Manhattan, on April 6, after he had been transferred there from the other hospital.

Mrs. Haas called at the Queens County Prosecutor's office and told her story to Charles Sullivan, Assistant District Attorney, who asked her to return tomorrow, when District Attorney Richard S. Newcombe would be there.

Mrs. Haas told Mr. Sullivan that on one occasion in Mary Immaculate Hospital she found Kenny lying in a pool of blood, and that several times he begged her and members of his family to get him out of the institution. She said he complained that he was not getting proper attention. When he was removed to the Post-Graduate Hospital, she added, the physician and nurse who received him said his was the worst case they had ever received.

"Everything I say will be corroborated by police officials and members of poor Kenny's family," said Mrs. Haas.

She also charged that a private nurse ordered for Kenny was not supplied while he was a patient at Mary Immaculate Hospital and officials at the hospital gave as a reason that no money had been received for the nurse's fees.

The Board of Managers of the hospital in a statement over the signature of the Rev. Thomas A. Nummey, Chairman, denied Mrs. Haas's charges, and said that Kenny received "the highest degree of medical skill" while at the hospital.

"Every one in the institution from the superintendent down to the pupil nurses took a special interest in his case," the statement said. "Everything possible was done for him."

Found Guilty of Extortion.

Edward F. Sheehan, 42 years old, of 51 West Eighty-first Street, was convicted yesterday in Judge Collins's part of General Sessions of extortion of $500 from J. Alvin Van Bergh, Secretary to Supreme Court Justice Joseph F. Proskauer, on Oct. 6, 1925. He will be sentenced on April 20. The maximum penalty is fifteen years. The verdict was returned in ten minutes. Vincent Russell, confederate of Sheehan, pleaded guilty on Feb. 5, and was sentenced to from two to four years in Sing Sing.

Fire Kills Crippled Woman.

Crippled by rheumatism, Mrs. Carmelia Abbatti, 63 years old, was burned to death last night in the kitchen of her home at 401 East 107th Street. While her husband was away, she attempted to start a fire in a coal stove. Her clothing was ignited, and unable to aid herself, she collapsed. By the time a neighbor discovered the fire she was dead. Firemen quickly extinguished the blaze.

Pinochle Player Dies When Dealt Eight Aces

CHICAGO, April 14.—The shock of picking up "a thousand aces," a "hand" such as he had never encountered in a lifetime of pinochle playing, is believed to have been too much for the weak heart of Herman Schlee, 68 years old, of 3,221 Franklin Boulevard, last night.

He picked up the cards, smiled at his friends with whom he was playing in the home of Charles Goerlik, then toppled over dead.

The hand that had been dealt to Schlee contained eight aces.

LABOR VOTES GIFT TO THE CATHEDRAL

Unions Will Raise a Fund of $145,000 for Transeptal Porch in St. John's.

MOVE TO BE NATION-WIDE

Federation Endorses Action to Issue Invitation to All the Organized Workers.

CAMPAIGN AIDS TO MEET

Reports on an Intensive Drive to Complete Quotas Will Be Made Today.

The Joint Labor Committee of Greater New York, representing the Central Trades and Labor Council, the Building Trades Council and the American Federation of Labor, voted at a meeting at 67 Lexington Avenue yesterday to pay for the southwest transeptal porch of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, as labor's contribution to the campaign for the completion of the cathedral.

The following resolution, introduced by John P. Coughlin, secretary of the Central Trades and Labor Council, was adopted:

"Resolved, that the Labor Committee accepts as its symbol for the labor memorial in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine the southwest transeptal porch, and pledges itself to raise a sufficient sum to erect this memorial to labor."

It is estimated that the labor porch will cost about $145,000. Plans were made to solicit contributions from organized labor throughout the country. Committees will call on local unions in this vicinity and on the officers of national bodies having offices here. Communications will be sent to the 110 national and international unions, the forty-eight State federations, 1,000 central bodies and prominent individuals in the labor movement, as well as to local unions affiliated directly with the American Federation of Labor. The internationals will be asked to communicate with their own locals.

The vote yesterday was official approval of a decision previously made by representatives of labor in consultation with Bishop William T. Manning of the Episcopal Diocese of New York. John J. Mulholland, Vice President of the Federation Bank, was elected as custodian of the fund.

Hugh Frayne, New York representative of the American Federation of Labor, called attention of the meeting to the endorsement of the plan by William Green, president, and the executive council of the Federation. Mr. Green recently wrote a letter to Mr. Coughlin, telling of the plan submitted to the Federation by a committee representing organized labor of this city, and of the action taken by the Federation, which is contained in the following endorsement:

Washington, D. C., March 31, 1926.

To Whom It May Concern:

The Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor has fully and sympathetically considered the plans and proposals of the joint committee of the Central Trades and Labor Council and the Building Trades Council of New York City to solicit funds as labor's contribution to the erection of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Thereupon the Executive Council declared:

"That the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor gives its endorsement to the work of the Labor Committee created for the purpose of raising funds as labor's contribution toward the erection of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. We commend the committee in its work and recommend that all members of organized labor and their friends who feel that they can contribute toward the fund being raised by this labor committee be urged to do so."

WILLIAM GREEN,
President American Federation of Labor.

Attest: FRANK MORRISON,
Secretary.

Workers in the community divisions of the campaign now engaged in a special two weeks' intensive campaign to raise their quotas will hold their first "report" luncheon at the Hotel Astor at 12:30 o'clock this afternoon.

$50,000 FOR CATHEDRAL.

Mrs. Shelton's Will Provides for Gift on Death of Her Sister.

The Cathedral of St. John the Divine will inherit $50,000 from the estate of Mrs. Helen F. Shelton, who died at Florence, Italy, on Jan. 25. Her will, filed for probate yesterday, gives her entire estate of "more than $60,000" to her sister, Miss Frances Edwards Shelton, also of Florence, Italy, in trust for life. Upon her death the cathedral will receive the $50,000 legacy.

A bequest of $2,500 to the Home for Protestant Girls in Florence also is provided for upon the termination of the life estate. The remainder is to be divided equally among Pauline Stockton Parker, William Ainsworth Parker Jr. and Helen King Parker, children of Mrs. Helen S. Parker, a cousin of Baltimore, and Anne Stockton and Peter K. Stockton, both of 150 East Sixty-third Street, children of Herbert K. Stockton, also a cousin.

BURGLAR FIGHTS WITH KNIFE

Bronx Resident Grapples With Him, but He Escapes.

The glare of a hall light betrayed a burglar who had forced open the door of the ground floor apartment of Sydney French at 1,168 Theriot Avenue, the Bronx, early yesterday. Awakened by the unaccustomed light, French warned his wife to make no outcry and crept from his bedroom. He found a man rummaging in a desk near the front door.

French grappled with the intruder, who fought back. Suddenly the burglar whipped out a penknife and stabbed French three times in the chest. As French staggered back, the man ran, disappearing over a back fence. The screams of Mrs. French awoke the neighborhood. Policemen searched in vain for the burglar. French was not seriously hurt and remained at home after receiving treatment from an ambulance surgeon. The thief obtained no loot.

CHILLY DAY REDUCES CROWD

New York Batsmen Hit Their Stride —Travis Jackson Supplies a Home Run.

By HARRY CROSS.

The inaugural of James Ring, the Long Islander from Maspeth, as a Giant pitcher transpired without any untoward incidents at the Polo Grounds yesterday and Brooklyn was reprimanded with a 9 to 5 defeat. It was a sort of secret occasion, for the cold weather kept many folks away who would otherwise have been interested. There were something like 40,000 less people there than at the opening on Tuesday.

Mr. Ring, a tried and true native of Queens, was for some time connected with the Phillies, where he dispensed a lot of his rare talent trying to lift a cellar club when they refused to be uplifted. Jimmy was overjoyed when he came to the Giants and to a town where he knew his pitching would be appreciated.

Being an old-timer who knows his business, Jimmy yesterday kept on his Winter flannels and kept himself warm enough to twirl winning ball. On these cold Spring days it is usually the team which manages to keep its temperature a bit higher than its opponent's that wins. Ring's camelhair toggery kept him on top yesterday.

The Robins did considerable batting, with Wheat getting three bangs and Marriott, Fournier and Felix two apiece, but Ring did his best tossing when the Brooklyns were perched on the corners eager to go. It was then that Jimmy's twists changed their minds.

Giants Hit Batting Stride.

The Giants had on their hitting regalia for the first time and pasted Jess Barnes out of the game in the fifth, made free with McWeeny's pitching and treated Ehrhardt's benders with disdain.

The high spot of the Giants' attack came in the fifth when Travis Jackson swung into line and belted a home run into the upper left field attic and shoved Tyson home in front of him, thereby tying the score at 3 to 3. From that moment the Robins receded down the chute rapidly.

Ring had a trying first inning, but he had himself in hand after that. In the first, with one out, Marriott walked and Wheat singled to centre. Tyson fumbled the ball, and although Marriott had stopped at second he went on to third. Fournier's single scored Marriott and sent Wheat to pier 3. Felix was nipped by a pitched ball and loaded the bases. Cox raised a high foul far back of third and Jackson went out and made a good catch. Wheat scoring after the grab.

Marriott singled again in the third. He stole second, when Pancho Snyder's mind was far, far away. Wheat got a ticket and Fournier forced him. A single to right by Felix pushed Marriott across.

The Giants tried to offset these runs in the first, but they had to be satisfied with one. Frisch spanked out a single and scored when Meusel jarred a three-bagger to left centre, which might have been a home run if Irish had come through under full steam.

McGrawmen Get Down to Cases.

In the fifth the Giants got down to business. Tyson opened with a whistling two-bagger to left and jogged home ahead of Jackson when Travis poled his homer into the stand. Snyder got a single and Ring walked. Groh rolled a bouncer to Barnes, but Jess made a wide toss to third for a force play and the bases were jammed. After Frisch fouled to O'Neil, Young singled to right scoring Snyder. The bases were still jammed, and when Barnes hit Meusel and forced Ring home, Captain Fournier dismissed Barnes for the day.

When McWeeny came in, Kelly found that he could not solve his pitching as he would like to have done, so he unpeeled a play which is seldom seen in the Giants' repertoire—the squeeze, Kell pushed the ball on the lawn toward first and Groh rushed over the plate. Tyson, up for the second time in the inning, died at first and ended the rally.

Jackson doubled in the sixth and Ring sent him home with a single. That was a triumphant moment for Jimmy, because all the hits he makes in a season he can count on one hand.

Fournier singled in the eighth, and got all the way home when Felix singled and Tyson's cold hands failed to encircle the ball firmly enough.

A Few More Runs Added.

In the Giants' half of the same inning Ring walked again and was forced by Groh. Heinie scored on a sharp double by Frisch. As Young walked, Frisch tried to steal third and was safe when Marriott muffed O'Neil's swift throw. Frank counted on Meusel's single.

The Robins got another in the ninth in singles by Whitey Witt and Marriott, Witt having reached second because no one troubled to interrupt his progress thence.

PIRATES RETALIATE AND DEFEAT CARDS

HAINES SEVERELY INJURED

St. Louis Pitcher Struck on Instep by Sharp Drive and Is Removed to the Hospital.

ST. LOUIS, April 14 (AP).—In the second of a four-game series the Pittsburgh Pirates evened things today by defeating St. Louis, 10 to 3. Yesterday, playing the series opener, the Cards emerged victorious, 7-6.

Kremer hurled brilliantly for Pittsburgh and also was responsible for two of his team's runs. Dyer, H. Bell, Haines and Reinhart did mound duty for the Cardinals, and, despite their best efforts, their opponents piled up five runs before St. Louis had a chance to retaliate, coming again with five more in the eighth. Two of the St. Louis runs came in the fourth, with a lone tally in the seventh.

Haines was struck on the instep in the third inning, and was so seriously injured that he was taken to a hospital. A drive from the bat of Earl Smith, Pirate catcher, struck the Cardinal pitcher. Physicians said they could not determine without an X-ray whether there was a fracture.

YANKS TOSS GAME TO RED SOX, 8 TO 7

HUGMEN WAGE GAME FIGHT

By JAMES R. HARRISON.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 14.—Although the happy Yuletide season is now several months past, the Yankees played Santa Claus at Fenway Park this afternoon with such effective zeal that the Red Sox won their first victory of the season, 8 to 7.

It was the Yankees' first defeat after winning nineteen games in a row and much can be forgiven. Yet, it is worth pointing out that the metropolitan pitching was again mediocre and the fielding very muddy. A wild toss by Mark Koenig in the third inning gave the Red Sox two runs and it requires no deep calculation to determine instantly that these two runs won the ball game for Boston.

Still, the Hugmen were not at all discouraging to their supporters. They pounded the ball with admirable lustiness, played a dashing game and showed such rugged fighting spirit that the Sox were reeling in their shoes when the ninth inning ended.

Two runs behind entering the ninth, the Yanks became annoying. Pat Collins, first at bat, clubbed the ball over the left-field fence for a homer. Nick Cullop, batting for McQuaid, singled through Herrera. Koenig lined to Lee but Combs walked, and both runners advanced on Gehrig's tap to the pitcher.

Ruth Gets Intentional Pass.

At this throbbing moment, Lee Fohl corrugated his brow in a profound bit of thinking and ordered Babe Ruth walked intentionally. It was a master stroke, for the most that Robert Meusel could do in answer to the pleading of his colleagues was to splash a feeble grounder to the pitcher.

The Yanks had a two-run lead until the sixth when, with two out and nobody on, Waite Hoyt was separated from five runs. Gaston's double started the parade. Carlyle batted for Ruffing and singled, scoring Gaston. Flagstead and Haney singled, scoring Carlyle. Rosenthal smashed a fly to deep right and it went for a three-bagger when Meusel excusably lost the ball in the sun, haze and smoke.

Two more runs came in and Hoyt went out. Todt stroked a single to right off Herb Pennock and Rosenthal dashed home. Bratche doubled to left, sending Todt to third, but Herrera, up for the second time, kindly dispatched an easy fly to Ruth.

The Koenig toss came in the third. With one out, Flagstead doubled and scored when Koenig threw Haney's grounder over Gehrig's head. Rosenthal's fly should have been the third out, but Todt followed with a single that scored Haney.

Ruth's walk, an out and Dugan's single gave New York a run in the second against Charley Ruffing, and Ruth's single scored Koenig, who had singled, in the third.

Yanks Regain Lead.

The Sox tied it up in the third, as described, but doubles by Combs and Meusel and Lazzeri's hot single restored the two-run lead in the sixth. Hoyt blew in the same inning, but the Yanks came back fighting mad in the seventh. Collins doubled and Paschal, batting for Pennock, walked. The next two did nothing, but Gehrig slammed a triple against the left field fence, reducing the Boston lead to 7-6.

McQuaid yielded a run in the seventh on two singles and a sacrifice fly. That proved to be the winning run.

In two games fifteen pitchers have been unveiled, thirty-eight runs scored and fifty-five hits manufactured. That would seem to prove the assertion that the lively ball is no more.

Meusel tried to steal home in the fourth and appeared to have made it, but McGowan called him out. Deep growling and much gesticulating by the Yankees. Bob stole third in the sixth.

It now develops that the umpires' ice cream suits are only for special occasions. The experts, however, are still up in the air. McGowan, the plate umpire, appeared today in last year's olive drab costume, while Dinneen, on the bases, was attired in blue.

2,000 Bid for Three Commissionerships as Legalized Boxing Returns to Chicago

CHICAGO, April 14 (AP).—With the return of legalized boxing to Chicago, after a lapse of twenty years, the next step toward opening of the sport here rests with Governor Len Small in naming three Commissioners, in whose hands the regulation of the sport will be placed.

The impression prevailed tonight that the men already had been selected but that their names would not be made public for at least ten days.

Governor Small has received more than 2,000 applications for membership on the commission. Conservative judges estimate that the first boxing bout probably will not be held until June. They point out that it will take that much time before the commission will be in a position to function. The commission must open offices, draw up rules, issue licenses and complete numerous details before it will be ready.

SCORELESS FOR 20 INNINGS

WASHINGTON, April 14 (AP).—Philadelphia bowed again today to air-tight pitching, and Washington took the second game of the opening series, 3 to 1. Coveleskie held the visitors to six hits while Harriss and Quinn were touched for ten.

The Senators bunched a few in the fourth to score their three markers, while the Athletics scored in the sixth after being held from the counting block for twenty consecutive innings. Walter Johnson shut them out yesterday for fifteen innings.

PHILADELPHIA, April 14 (AP).—The Phillies took their second straight from Boston today, winning 10 to 1. Wertz of the Braves started fairly well, but was driven from the mound in the fifth inning. Four hits in this inning, one Cy Williams's first home run of the season, accounted for five runs.

Wayland Dean, starting his first game for the Phillies, was wild, but allowed only four hits and was never in danger.

SKEETERS GET OFF TO A GOOD START

Record Crowd for Opening Day Sees Them Defeat Syracuse Stars by 5 to 4.

FOUR EX-ROBINS ON TEAM

Before the largest crowd that ever witnessed the opening of a baseball season in Jersey City the Skeeters got away with 5 to 4 victory over the Syracuse Stars yesterday, four former Brooklyn performers playing a great part in the inaugural triumph. Guy Cantrell, the big right-hander obtained from the Robins, hurled the opening game and except for one bad inning, when the Stars made four runs and took the lead, he held the visitors completely in check.

Governor A. Harry Moore sat in the box of honor and opened the ceremonies by tossing out the first ball. With the Governor were Mayor Frank Hague and John Conway Toole, President of the International League. These three watched the customary parade of players to the flagpole, where the Stars and Stripes were raised, and then settled back to view the hard-fought battle that followed.

Cantrell Slow to Start.

Cantrell was slow to get warmed up and in the third, on three hits, a base on balls and an error by Corgan, another former Brooklyn player, the Stars got away to a lead of 4 to 0. In the last half of the same frame, however, the Skeeters got back two of those runs and in the fifth, Frankhouse, the Syracuse pitcher, was driven from the box by Del Bissonette, whose double sent Huston and Gaudette, both of whom had walked across the plate with the tying runs. Corgan then made up for his error by smashing out a single that sent Bissonette over the pan with the winning tally.

After this attack had provided the Skeeters with a lead, Cantrell settled down to business and for the last six innings of the game he allowed just two hits.

Bissonette Performs Well.

Bissonette, who drove in the tying runs and scored the winning tally himself was obtained from Brooklyn just before the game. The big first baseman was loaned to the Skeeters by the Robins during the Spring training period, recalled by Brooklyn on Monday and returned again just in time to break up the battle yesterday.

Yale Loses to N. Y. U. Nine by 9 to 5

BLUE OUTBATS VIOLET, 9-7

But Fails to Make Most of Chances —Score Is Tied at 4-All in Fifth, but Victors Close Fast.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 14.—Davis's triple with the bases filled in the ninth clinched victory for the New York University nine here today, the visitors emerging with the long end of the 9 to 5 score. Yale was trailing by 6 to 4 when the opposing left fielder cleaned the bases, and with the healthy wallop went the Elis' last chance of taking the lead from the fast stepping invaders, who made the most of their opportunities in the field and at the bat.

Yale outhit New York University, 9 to 7, but was unable to bunch hits off Brooke when they were valuable. Bill Holabird, on the mound for the Elis, fanned eight batters, but walked five, the victors proving to be fine waiters and seldom went after the bad ones, with the result that they continually had the Yale hurling ace in hot water.

Violet hitters started off with a bang, pushing over three runs in the opening inning by making the most of chances presented by the Yale players, who opened the festivities in a listless manner. With a three-run lead New York settled down, but Yale came back in the second and scored a pair of runs. Both teams tallied a run each in the third and in the fifth the Blue knotted the count at 4-all, but the tie was short-lived as New York scored in the sixth and again in the eighth, Davis's triple in the ninth settling the issue as Brooke, displaying plenty of stuff on the mound and receiving admirable backing from his mates in the field, blanked the Elis from the fifth until the final session, when he eased up a bit and Yale scored its final tally.

Yale passed up its only chance to forge into the lead in the seventh, when with two down Jones lined to third and was safe when Ingram threw wild to first. The runner and Lincoln, New York first baseman, became tangled up and in the mix-up, Jones reached second, and the two Yale runners scored with apparently the tying and winning runs, but keen work in the visiting infield caused the ball to be thrown to first and Jones was called out for failing to touch the base.

After this slip the invaders stepped into the van and were never headed. Watson, centre fielder, starred at the bat for the winners.

COLUMBIA PROFITS BY UPSALA ERRORS

Columbia's varsity nine returned to winning form at Baker Field yesterday afternoon and defeated Upsala College, 6 to 1, in a raggedly played game. Led by Captain Ferdie Zegri and Frank Trentacosti, each of whom got a double and a single, the Blue and White solved the offerings of Jacobs, a right-hander, for nine hits and profited in the scoring through five of the visitors' six errors.

Art Smith, Josh Billings and Allen Fitch divided the pitching for Columbia, each of them going three innings. Smith fanned three, but was found for two hits, Schlossbach driving in the Jersey nine's only run when his double to centre in the third sent home Law, who had walked. Billings, a veteran, made his 1926 début in the fourth, and though he passed four men, neither runs nor hits were made off his delivery and three struck out. Fitch allowed only one safe blow in the last three frames.

Poor fielding by Jacobs was responsible for the Blue and White's opening counter in the second. With one out, Lorch beat out an infield single and took second unmolested. Whitaker struck out, but MacWillie walked, and when Gardner hit to the box, Jacobs fumbled his drive and then threw past third in an effort to catch Lorch, who crossed the plate.

Two more Columbia runs came across in the next inning, though neither of them was earned. Trentacosti drew a pass and went all the way to third when Kirk dropped Art Smith's fly to centre, the runner reaching second. Trentacosti tallied while Carew was throwing out Norris and Art Smith was nipped at the plate when Erickson made a fielder's choice on Rothenfeld's grounder and threw home. Rothenfeld took second on an error by Schlossbach, advanced another sack on a passed ball and finished up by stealing home.

That was more than enough to win the game, but the home nine scored two more runs in the sixth.

Fine Throw-In by Cobb Prevents Tie After Four Runs Cross and Cadets Win, 6 to 5.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., April 14.—The West Point cadets won from University of Vermont in a chilly baseball game today, 6 to 5. The contest was loosely played, errors figuring largely in most of the run-getting. The Army men, however, found Roark's offerings fairly simple.

Easton was effective until the eighth, when he walked a Vermonter and was promptly pounced on for a trio of safe drives, one of them a triple by Randall, producing four runs.

Randall was caught at the plate on a fine throw-in by Cobb while he was trying to stretch the hit into the tying run. Cobb also featured in a difficult catch off Bradley's bat in the ninth.

FORDHAM CAPTURES FIFTH STRAIGHT, 9-1

Providence College Held in Check by Harrington and Cooney, Who Fan Twelve Men.

Joe Harrington, Fordham's speed ball artist, won his third straight victory and gave the Maroon its fifth by beating the Providence College nine at Fordham Field yesterday, 9-1. Harrington allowed one run and seven hits in seven innings, fanning nine, and then gave way to Bob Cooney, who had three strike-outs to his credit and did not yield a hit in the last two frames.

The first two visiting players to bat in the third inning, Allen and Considine, singled over third base, Allen being held at second on the latter's blow. Doyle's bunt was poorly handled, filling the bases, and Halloran's infield tap scored Allen, matching a run Fordham had made the previous inning. With the bases full and none out, Harrington tightened up and was never again in danger.

Fordham's tally in the second inning was made off Reynolds when Graham reached second on Allen's bad throw, after fumbling his grounder. A hit to right by Cobb scored Graham. The Maroon's big inning was the fourth, when four runs on singles by Landry and Carter, and a double by Clancy, coupled with some loose Providence fielding, proved to be the turning point of the game.

PRINCETON DOWNS LAFAYETTE, 3 TO 2

FOWLER GETS HOMER IN 2D

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 14.—Princeton defeated Lafayette, 3 to 2, here today, tight fielding featuring the contest. The balance of the scoring went to the Tigers, due to the fact that they were able to garner seven hits off Captain Halstead, while Jack Kellogg was holding the opposition to five in a hurling duel. Three fast double plays kept down the scoring.

The Tigers' starting line-up showed three substitutes, Rem Labeaume, Bill Richards and Jake Slagle being out of the game. Tim Wilson, who played his first full game at short, started both of Princeton's double plays, but gave the visitors their first run on a misplay in the second inning.

After Lafayette had gotten away to a one-run lead in the second on an error, a sacrifice, and McGarvey's single, Princeton tied the count in their half when Fowler, right fielder, drove the ball into deep left for a home run. The teams kept the count even by lone scores in the fourth and fifth. Lafayette threatened both in the eighth and ninth, after the Tigers took the lead in the sixth, scoring one run. Kellogg tightened up, however, and fanned Salembier and Moore in the eighth.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 14.—Harvard's team played heads-up baseball today and defeated Rhode Island State, 10 to 2, at Soldiers' Field in a game called at the end of the eighth inning on account of darkness.

The Crimson nine had Chauncey behind the bat and Booth on the mound, the latter holding the invaders well in check. He allowed only seven hits, while the Crimson batsmen obtained 12 safeties off the combined offerings of Lamont and Draghetti.

In the sixth inning, after Zarakov was passed, singles by Todd and Lord, a triple by Sullivan and another single by Chauncey netting four runs, put the game on ice for Harvard.

Harford Handicap Captured by Noah as Havre de Grace Opens

NOAH FIRST AGAIN AT HAVRE DE GRACE

Captures the Harford Handicap Second Year in Row as Season Opens With 18,000 Crowd.

WINS 3 STRAIGHT STARTS

Whitney Colt In Front All the Way —Timmara Beats Rock Man In Tip Top Purse.

By HENRY R. ILSLEY.

HAVRE DE GRACE, Md., April 14.—Running out in front from flag fall to finish, Harry Payne Whitney's four-year-old colt Noah captured the fourteenth running of the Harford Handicap this afternoon in a field of fourteen of the fleetest sprinters in training. Fred Hopkins saddled the brown son of Peter Pan and First Flight, and Honey McAtee brought him home a winner by a length in 1:12 4-5 for the six furlongs over a fast track.

Noah won the Harford a year ago and it was his third straight victory this season in as many starts. The winner was the short-priced favorite and paid $6.10 for each $2 in the mutuels. The stake had a total value of $12,725, the winner's share being $9,225.

The Harford was a truly run race, the winner having the foot of the field throughout the contest. McAtee never drew his whip. It was a popular victory, the winner being the public choice throughout the betting.

It was a fitting feature for the opening day of the meeting of the Harford Agricultural and Breeders' Association, and a crowd of some 18,000 enthusiastic race followers vociferously acclaimed the winner as he came thundering down in front.

Crowd Overflows Infield.

It was a beautiful Spring day and the first time since last Saturday that the sun has shone in a practically cloudless sky. It was a typical opening-day crowd that jammed all available vantage points, there being a considerable overflow into the infield during the running of the leading number. Horsemen were present from all over the East, and many prominent persons were in attendance from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

While the racing strip was fast, it was not on its keenest edge after the recent rains and a shower during the night. A fine looking lot of sprinters went to the post, there having been six scratches from the field of twenty named over night.

There was a delay of only four minutes at the post and only one untoward incident in connection with the start. That was when Edward F. Whitney's Joy Smoke wheeled as the barrier rose and bolted to the outer rail, being left completely.

Battle for Place and Show.

Noah showed in front when the horses found their strides and remained there all the way. The battle was for the other positions. Lee Rosenberg's filly Extra Dry took down second money, beating H. G. Bedwell's Senator Norris by a head, with Polly McWiggles, stablemate of Extra Dry, being lapped on the third horse.

The feature of the six furlongs dash for three-year-olds and upward, under claiming conditions, was the sensational finish of Mrs. A. Swenke's four-year-old colt McCrimmon, which came to the wire like a flash of lightning after running clear to the outer rail in the stretch after leading around the turn.

Benny Marinelli was up, it being the first mount he has been able to accept since his dangerous injuries at the Jamaica course at the Spring meeting almost a year ago. McCrimmon was going nicely at the time that he bolted to the fence. Marinelli managed to get him going again and he finished on the extreme outside of the track, thousands in the stands believing that he had won.

Johnny Campbell Is Victor.

The decision, however, went to J. Rotunno's Johnny Campbell, which paid $8.20 in the machines. Edward F. Whitney's Contract, the favorite, took second money.

T. W. O'Brien's Timmara, two-time winner at Bowie and regarded as a Kentucky Derby hope, captured the Tip Top Purse over five and a half furlongs with a burst of speed in the last seventy yards. Rock Man came in second after setting a severe pace all the way. He held on grimly at the end, but could not stave off Timmara. Harass finished third. Rock Man was running his first race and made an impressive showing.

H. G. Bedwell's four-year-old colt Cudgeller just galloped home to win the Chester Purse by a wide margin, with G. C. Winfrey's Tester taking the place in a hot fight from G. C. Denny's Commissioner.

W. Smith had the mount and rated him off the pace set by Tester. J. K. L. Ross's Golden Rule trailed the leader, but was through on the turn, where Smith began his move.

J. E. Widener Has 75 Horses Training Here and in France

It became known yesterday that Joseph E. Widener has seventy-five horses in training. This was revealed when the Philadelphia sportsman sent to his friends a list of the horses that will carry his colors in the United States and France during 1926. The fact that Mr. Widener had so many horses in training was a surprise to all except those intimately connected with his racing activities. Among twenty-eight two-year-olds are five of the get of Man o' War. Four are fillies and one a colt. Also among the two-year-olds is a brother to Chance Play and Ladkin. Twenty-six of the horses are in training in France under Jerry Welsh and the others are under the care of G. H. Keene in this country. A dozen of the horses are steeplechasers.

Niemzowitsch of Copenhagen today emerged as winner of the international chess masters' tournament, in progress here since March 7 in connection with the Jubilee Congress of the Dresden Chess Club at the Masonic Temple. The representative of Denmark wound up fittingly by defeating Saemisch of Germany, after thirty-one moves in the ninth and final round.

As a result Niemzowitsch, who last night was leading by a clear point, opened still wider the gap between him and Dr. Alekhine of Paris, who drew his fourth game today against von Holzhausen of Germany and took second place, 1½ points behind the victor. The only game Niemzowitsch did not win was the one with Dr. Alekhine in the third round.

Rubinstein of Poland finished third, thanks to a win today against Steiner of Hungary. Although he lost both of his games to Niemzowitsch and Dr. Alekhine, he was only half a point behind the latter at the end. Fourth prize was won by Dr. Tartakower of Vienna, who drew with Yates of England. Von Holzhausen of Germany finished fifth. Bluemich of Germany, by defeating Johner of Switzerland, pulled out of last place.

The summary of the final round:

BRITISH GOLF PROS OPEN 1926 SEASON

They Give Proof to Admirers That They Are Ready for American Invasion.

GADD AND OCKENDEN LEAD

LONDON, April 14 (AP).—The first big guns of what will be Great Britain's busiest golfing season since the war boomed over the rolling hills of suburban Roehampton today, when half a hundred native professionals, including all the famous names in British golfdom and a few overseas contenders, volleyed and thundered with irons and woods in the early season fight for the qualifying places in the Roehampton Club's annual invitation competition.

The honors of the day went to George Gadd, the Roehampton Club's pro, and James Ockenden of Hanger Hill, who banged their way around the course, which is 1,000 yards short of championship length, in 137.

Abe Mitchell, the man upon whom anxious and hopeful eyes of the kingdom are focused for rehabilitation of Great Britain's supremacy, thrilled the galleries with the mighty distance of his shot-making and the accuracy of his approaches, followed the leaders with 139, which also was Archie Compston's figure. Harry Vardon led the old guard with 144, J. H. Taylor and George Duncan bringing up the rear with 145.

Fifteen Britons returned 145 or better, and the fact that they did it—two rounds in only one shot more than average is—cheers many a native heart tonight, for it is taken as proof that the professionals have been practicing during the Winter and are ready to meet the forthcoming American invasion with a high standard of play.

It is still a little too early for the Americans to start preparations for the British open championship and none competed today. Aubrey Boomer, the French winner of the event last year, returned 144 and was the only foreigner to qualify.

The Australian champion, Tom Howard, who has shocked his mother country by his unorthodox putting—he keeps his eye on the hole instead of on the ball—finished with 159. Two Argentinians came after him with 162 and 165.

FORT BRAGG GAINS SPRING POLO TITLE

PINEHURST, N. C., April 14.—Fort Bragg won the Spring polo championship here today, defeating the Sand Hills by 11 to 2 in the final. Fort Bragg's teamwork brought about the victory.

In the opening chukkers the teamwork of both fours was extremely poor, but the soldiers soon amassed a lead of 7 goals to 1. The Sand Hill defense failed to function properly and time and again an army player was allowed to sweep down the field on a long carry.

Lieutenant Baker was the leading player, with 5 goals. Captain Royse, who was badly hurt in the series last week, played with a bandaged head and scored three goals. Little and Latting did yeoman work for the local team in trying to head off the army forwards.

The line-up:

FORT BRAGG (11).	SAND HILLS (2).
No. 1—Clyburn.	No. 1—Shaw.
No. 2—Baker.	No. 2—Little.
No. 3—Royse.	No. 3—Foster.
Back—Trousdale.	Back—Latting.

Referee—John Daly, New York.

Yale and Harvard oarsmen will all pull together when they do honor to William A. Meikleham, who has refereed practically all of the Yale-Harvard boat races since 1891, at a dinner April 23 at the Hotel Biltmore. Robert F. Herrick for Harvard and Frederic W. Allen for Yale, sent out invitations yesterday to all ex-oarsmen of both universities to attend the dinner. The members of the crews at both universities also will attend. It is expected that more than one thousand members of Harvard and Yale varsity, second varsity and freshman crews will pay tribute to the veteran referee.

Mr. Meikleham's services extend over thirty-five years and he is expected to see at the dinner a number of men who occupied the Yale and Harvard shells in the first year he assumed his duties. In addition, old-timers whose athletic activity dates almost as far back as the Civil War are expected to attend.

The seating will be according to age, alternating Harvard and Yale men. Yale oarsmen are to meet before the dinner at the Yale Club and Harvard oarsmen at the Harvard Club. There will be two or three short speeches according to the present program and singing will be led by members of the Yale and Harvard Glee Clubs.

YALE FRESHMEN TRIUMPH.

Down Roxbury School, 7 to 3, In Game Halted by Darkness.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 14.—John Garvey and his brother Frank were big factors in today's Yale freshman-Roxbury School baseball game, which the Eli Yearlings won, 7 to 3, before darkness stopped it at the end of the seventh inning.

John fanned sixteen of the Cheshire youngsters, registered a run, a single and a triple and allowed the visitors only three scattered singles. Frank let the yearling batsmen down with only eight safeties and touched his brother's delivery for one of the three singles made by the prep school nine. The box score:

JOE GLICK OUTPOINTS MACK IN JERSEY CITY

Carries Eight of Ten Rounds in Fast Bout, According to Experts at Ringside.

Joe Glick of Williamsburg, considered the foremost challenger for the junior lightweight title, won a newspaper decision from Petey Mack of Jersey City before a crowd of 5,000 in the Fourth Regiment Armory, Jersey City, last night. No decisions are permitted in New Jersey, but Glick won by a big margin, according to ringside observers. He won eight of the ten rounds and held Mack even in the other two. Glick weighed 122¾ and Mack 127½ pounds. The spectators paid $6,200 to see the bout, which was fast.

The victor had an advantage in height, weight and reach, and made the most of them. He also was more ringwise and canny. Glick staggered his opponent several times during the bout and probably missed a chance for a knockout in the sixth round when in his eagerness he became erratic and permitted Mack to recover after being on the verge of a knockout. The Jersey City boxer fought courageously at all times and was given a cheer for his game stand.

Mack earned an even break in the first. In the second Glick was wild and was several times warned by Referee Joe Jeanette about hitting low. Mack's other even round was the eighth, in which he hurt Glick with a right to the body. Mack in this round tripped on Glick's feet and fell to the floor, but was up immediately. In the second Glick also slipped to the floor when he stumbled.

Other bouts resulted as follows: Herman (Kid) Silvers, 123, Ansonia, Conn., outpointed Buck Joseph, Newark, 123, eight rounds; Georgie Mack, 120, Jersey City, outpointed Wee Willie Spencer, 120, East Side, eight rounds; Bob Brady knocked out Harry Crosby after two minutes of the second round in a scheduled six-round bout; and Al Maresca outpointed Johnny Gorzinsky in six rounds.

Some definite announcements as to the time and place of the proposed world's heavyweight battle between Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney probably will be forthcoming before another week. Either that or announcement will be made whether a Dempsey-Tunney bout being prohibited, a match between the champion and Harry Wills is to be arranged or whether Tunney and Wills are to fight it out for the privilege of meeting Dempsey.

Promoter Tex Rickard is to leave this city Saturday on a mysterious errand, which he refused yesterday to divulge. He denied that he contemplated a trip to El Paso, Texas, to sign Dempsey.

Jack Kearns left the city yesterday after a brief conference with Rickard. The deposed manager of Dempsey announced the conference involved only the future ring activities of one Napoleon Dorval, whom Kearns is booming as a heavyweight title prospect, but it is known that the promoter and Kearns discussed Dempsey and his title, and it is understood that one of the subjects discussed was the figure Kearns would take to cancel his contract with Dempsey and thus leave the champion free to arrange whatever contests suit his fancy. Such a course would relieve Dempsey of the worry the champion now is being caused by the knowledge that he must divide with Kearns his earnings from a bout with Tunney or Wills.

Paddy Mullins maintained a discreet silence as to his future plans, but he is expected to decide on the future of Wills today, when the time limit expires on the contract which Promoter Floyd Fitzsimmons holds with Wills for a Dempsey-Wills bout in the Middle West. Fitzsimmons must produce the guarantee money today or his contract with Wills will be automatically void. In the latter case Wills will be in a position to consider some of the many other offers available, among them an offer to fight Tunney. Kearns has gone to Scranton to look into fistic matters there in so far as they concern Mickey Walker's defense of his welterweight title against Pete Latzo on May 17. He was accompanied by Walker and is expected back on the week-end.

Turn about being fair play in boxing as well as in other lines, another chapter yesterday was written in the skirmishing among local boxing promoters which promises to assume the proportions of a life-sized war as the outdoor season progresses.

Matchmaker Jack Epstein announced he had signed Joe Dundee, Baltimore's crack welterweight, who is the outstanding contender for Mickey Walker's title, to fight Willie Harmon, rugged east side fighter, who, too, is clamoring for a match with the champion. The lads were announced signed to battle on May 28 at the opening of the Coney Island Stadium. In signing the match Epstein lifted it almost out of the lap of Promoter Humbert Fugazy, Ebbets Field promoter, who was on the verge of signing Dundee and Harmon as a supporting bout for the battle at Ebbets Field on May 26 in which Jack Delaney is to appear.

There are three of us!

WHEN your mind's made up and you set your sail to own a reproducing piano, there should be three names on the tip of your tongue —and three recitals on your program. Comparison should be your weapon, for the investment is large and great music in your home is the stake.

Of all the three important reproducing actions, only the Welte-Mignon embodies the perfected playing unit in the piano perfected to play it. Consider this and compare the musical effect with the other two.

Hear them first, if you care to. And then let the Welte-Mignon play for you here at our studios. It will capture you, as it has

LONDON SIGNAL WILL OPEN 'RADIO HOUSE'

Flash to Come at 9 Tonight to Inaugurate the Experimental Building on Staten Island.

RADIO INSTALLATION TEST

A wireless signal in the form of a dash sent from London at 9 o'clock tonight by Captain E. P. Eckersley of the British Broadcasting Company will officially open a home, known as the "Radio House," at Grymes Hill and Starlight Road, Staten Island. The signal from England will be intercepted at Tuckerton, N. J., and will then be sent over land wires to the house where the electrical impulses will control relays designed to close radio circuits throughout the dwelling.

The house, which has just been completed, is equipped with a complete radio receiving installation, which the engineers contend can be duplicated in the average home without difficulty. Switches built in the walls, similar to the switches used to turn on and off the electric lights, control the radio circuits in the various rooms. Provision is made so that the loud speakers can be plugged into the circuit in the rooms in the same manner as the loud speaker is plugged into a receiver.

The house is equipped with three installations. One uses alternating current, another direct current and the third partial alternating and direct current. Any one can be used separately.

The experiment is to show that if a house is supplied with alternating current it can be used to operate the entire set by furnishing the current instead of "A" and "B" batteries. Or if direct current is available it can be used.

Time clocks are arranged in the circuit so that they can be set to turn the receiver on or off at a definite time. For example, the clock in the bedroom can be set to turn the radio on at 6 A. M., when the setting-up exercises begin.

No outdoor antennae are used. The wires used for picking up the passing ether waves were all concealed within the walls when the house was under construction. The master receiver is located in the living room. Six loud speakers are located throughout the house—in the living room, dining room, kitchen, two bedrooms and on the porch.

Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, chief broadcast engineer of the Radio Corporation of America, who designed the installation, will entertain a group of engineers at the house tonight. The party will include Arthur Batcheller, Radio Supervisor of the New York district, and Donald McNicol, President of the Institute of Radio Engineers.

BRITISH LAUD WGY PROGRAM

Tone Quality Is Reported "Equal to Local Studios."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., April 14 (AP). A program of dinner music broadcast here last night by WGY, the General Electric station, was relayed throughout Great Britain with a tone quality "equal to local studios," it was announced in a cablegram received today from Captain A. G. D. West, assistant engineer of the British Broadcasting Company. The message follows:

While relaying of American programs by British stations has been practiced for some time, reception across the Atlantic has not been of high quality, static and other interference having a marked effect on the signals. Last night's program was broadcast for British listeners by 2XAF, the 32.79-meter experimental station of the General Electric Company, and was picked up and rebroadcast by all the stations of the British Broadcasting Company.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

The heavy selling under which the stock market declined yesterday, with particular weakness in the recent leaders of the speculative movement, had all the signs of a concerted professional movement. It will naturally be ascribed to the fact that the recovery in prices at the end of March had continued no longer than the repurchases of speculators for the decline, and that other speculators who had bought stocks around the lowest prices of March appeared to be selling out on the recovery. All professional speculation being experimental in nature, it is to be presumed that yesterday's selling was a bold test of the stability of values.

It had no manifest connection with the day's news; the attempt to identify stock market reaction with the incidents in Cuba and the state of the sugar market was hardly convincing. But the whole movement illustrates again the difficulty of determining intrinsic values, or at any rate of instilling confidence in such values, after so wild distortion of the price-making process as that to which the market had been subjected. An atmosphere of uncertainty always surrounds a market which has passed through such experiences, and yesterday the consideration most commented on was not the fact of "bear selling" but the absence of strong resistance.

Even the steel shares declined yesterday; partly, perhaps, because of midweek trade reports that the pace of steel production has already slowed down moderately, the Steel Corporation now working at about 95 per cent. of capacity, as against full capacity recently. But this was quite inevitable. The Iron Age comments on the fact that, whereas a year ago the slackening of output was response to visibly expanding stocks in consumers' hands, the meagreness of such stocks is today the matter of remark.

Several highly interesting reports from trade and industry were published yesterday; among them the third consecutive monthly statement of foreign trade to show an "import surplus." No such showing has been made since 1923, when the excess of imports continued from March to June, inclusive. The $70,000,000 excess reported now for March brings the quarter's surplus of imports over exports to $134,100,000; which is less than the $151,600,000 in the three months ending with May, 1923, but otherwise more than twice as large as in any similar period in our previous commercial history. Usually in the past, continued movements of this character have occurred as a consequence of sudden speeding-up of American home trade, coupled with rising prices on our commodity markets; that was notably the case in 1923.

It has not always happened under such circumstances, however. Sometimes, as in the prolonged "import-surplus periods" of 1914, 1897 and 1893, our own markets were falling but Europe's were growing increasingly urgent in their effort to find a market. The present instance, with a surplus of imports occurring in three months of slowly falling American prices, has more resemblance of those periods rather than to the rising-price period of 1923. Yet it differs from them also.

That our export trade in wheat should have fallen to wholly negligible proportions, as against the $41,000,000 sent out in grain alone in the three months of 1925, is a necessary consequence of a wheat crop last Autumn hardly exceeding home requirements. Yesterday's monthly "cotton-consumption report" states exports of that product in March to have been 220,344 bales less than a year ago and the three months' shipments as smaller by 802,106. The evident reason for that shrinkage is the abnormally large takings of our cotton by the outside world in the last four months in 1925. The immense increase which then occurred, especially in export to Europe, was not a consequence of activity in the foreign textile trade, but of something like exhaustion in foreign stocks of cotton as a result of the long-continued shortage of American production. Apparently this deficiency had been made good by the end of 1925. As against the decreased cotton export, however, last month's consumption by home mills was the largest ever reported.

BAKING STOCK DEAL FAIR, WARD ASSERTS

Declares Action Was Perfectly Open and Would Save the Company $600,000.

DEININGER KNEW, HE SAYS

Charges Stockholders' Committee Head Quit Board Threatening to Rule or Ruin Concern.

William B. Ward, in a statement issued yesterday in answer to the letter sent to stockholders by a committee headed by William Deininger, former Chairman of the General Baking Company, said that there was "nothing hidden or concealed" about the transactions through which the corporation bought 119,900 shares of its own stock for $8,547,935. The deal would save stockholders $600,000 annually in dividends, he asserted.

Rabenold & Scribner of 61 Broadway, attorneys for the stockholders' committee, said that Mr. Ward's statement confirmed the allegations contained in the committee's letter to stockholders. The reference to a saving of $600,000 in dividends they called "interesting, in view of the loss already accrued to the corporation of over $2,250,000 in the alleged purchase."

The attorneys pointed out that the investigation now being carried on had not been fully completed, as certain records were still unobtainable. If these are not made available in the near future they intimated that mandamus proceedings would be instituted.

Says He Talked to Deininger.

"There was nothing hidden or concealed about the purchase of over 100,000 shares of its own A stock by General Baking Corporation. It saved General Baking Company stockholders $600,000 a year in dividends. Mr. Deininger was Chairman of the Board at the time, was in the city and talked with me before a share of stock was delivered, as my records show. He only wanted my assurance that I was not making any profit on the transaction. He got that, and the price was determined by the original purchase vouchers received from the brokers. The stock had all been bought in the open market. General Baking Corporation paid only the actual cost of the stock, and neither Ward Securities Corporation nor myself made a cent on the transaction.

"Every director of General Baking Corporation knew of the purchase and that the stock was selling and continued to sell at 74 or better, several points above the average price paid by the corporation, until the Government suit was filed in February.

Work for Idle Cash.

"The company by the purchase put idle cash to work and will save nearly $600,000 a year in dividends by the purchase, which nets General Baking Corporation better than 7 per cent. on its money.

"Later Mr. Deininger and all the directors gave Ward Securities 70,000 shares of A non-voting stock for 1,000,000 shares of voting B stock which Ward Securities owned or controlled. Mr. Deininger says nothing of the later transaction, and I understand he approved it whole-heartedly. In fact, he was very anxious to pay $5,000,000 in cash for the stock.

"The new Board of Directors, with new men in control, went all over the transactions and have ratified them, after Mr. Deininger had left the board with threats to rule or ruin the company. The legality of the transaction is unquestioned. Its fairness is equally clear, and Mr. Deininger and his attorneys do not need any proxies to determine these propositions."

Ward Confirms Charge, Lawyers Say.

Following the issuance of Mr. Ward's statement, Rabenold & Scribner issued one in which they said:

"Mr. Ward has just issued his own confirmation of the committee's letter. He now publicly concedes that all the money was received from minor officials of the company, without the pretense of any bargain, agreement or corporate action, before any stock was delivered.

"After he had received the money he delivered certain stock at a price which he himself determined. The withdrawal of the cash has for the time thwarted all the corporation's plans for extension of its business, including the plans for expansion upon which Mr. Ward himself made the market in putting out this stock.

"Mr. Ward's own appointees, Mr. Helms and Mr. Rumbough, designated and elected the so-called new Board of Directors. The legality and fairness are questioned, and formal demand has been made on the corporation to proceed against Mr. Ward to recover the $8,500,000.

"We can understand Mr. Ward's gratuitous advice to General Baking stockholders not to give proxies. Neither he nor this Board of Directors has hazarded to submit the matter to the stockholders, as required by law. Mr. Ward, under restraint of Government decree, is disqualified from interfering in the management of this corporation's affairs. His remarks about saving $600,000 yearly in dividends are interesting in view of the loss already accrued to the corporation of more than $2,250,000 in the alleged purchase."

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

News, Comment and Incident, On the Stock Exchange and in the Financial Markets.

At the opening of the Stock Exchange yesterday, when it became evident that the market was not holding the rally that developed late on Tuesday, professional operators started to put out short lines of stock, pushing down prices a point or more from the previous closing. This movement continued until around noon, when there was a moderate rally, due to short covering, following the easier call money rate. In the late afternoon, however, offerings again increased and prices broke sharply. The weakness first appeared in the sugar stocks, then in the motors and specialties, and later extended into other sections of the list. At the close net declines of 2 to 5 points were numerous among the more active issues, including Hudson Motors, Woolworth, National Biscuit, National Dairy Products, Steel common, Baldwin, American Locomotive and United States Rubber. General Electric was down 7¾ points net. While the advance in the call money rate to 5½ per cent. on Monday was assumed to be a market influence, the drop to 4 per cent. yesterday had no effect on prices. Trading was only moderately active.

The stocks of the various sugar companies, which generally held firm on Monday when the first news of the Cuban situation came to hand, broke sharply yesterday. The decline started in the stocks of other than Cuban corporations. South Porto Rico Sugar dropped to 96 and closed with a net loss of 22 points for the day, while Great Western broke to 89, closing with a net loss of 3 points. In both instances the stocks established new low records for the current year. The selling was based upon the belief that agitation for elimination of the sugar tariff would result from the present crisis in Cuba. In view of the sharp decline in the stocks mentioned, it was considered natural that shares of other sugar companies should break in sympathy. American Sugar sold down to 65¾, also a new low for the year and of 2¾ points for the day. The shares of the various Cuban companies also were lower. After the close word was received that the Cuban Government had recommended a 10 per cent. curtailment in production.

A Concerted Attack.

Trading on the Stock Exchange in the last thirty minutes yesterday gave evidence of a concerted attack on stocks, and the manner in which prices, especially of the market leaders, faded away showed that it was of very determined character, with plenty of courage and conviction as well as cash behind it. The market had been irregular all day. There had been a moderate recovery, but half an hour before the close pressure suddenly increased, especially on Hudson Motors, Steel common and General Motors. These leaders not only lost all of the gains they had been able to make earlier in the day, but in the case of Steel common and Hudson sold at new low records for the year. Hudson came out on the tape in long strings, each one aggregating several thousand shares of stock.

The Motor Situation.

Wall Street, and particularly that section of it which is bearish at the moment, has centred on the motor industry for marked consideration in connection with the stock market. The Street has been reading for several weeks of capacity production in practically all plants and glowing optimistic statements by the Presidents of various companies about how far operations this year are ahead of last. Some of the wind was taken out of the sails of these statements, however, by the April bulletin of the Federal Reserve Bank, which, after noting that all records had been broken in the industry, added: "reports, however, indicate that retail sales by dealers were much smaller than their receipts from manufacturers." It was this sentence which attracted widespread attention in Wall Street yesterday. It was argued by friends of the motor stocks, however, that this statement applied to February, when weather and sales conditions were bad, and that there was no reason to believe that it applied to present conditions.

No Stevenson Plan for Sugar.

With the Cuban sugar industry suffering from overproduction on a scale comparable to that which nearly ruined the British rubber industry a few years ago, some outsiders have asked why the method which saved the latter might not be applied to the former. The rubber planters admittedly were saved by the Stevenson plan of restricted output; but, according to an observer, such a plan could not be applied to the sugar industry. It appears that to leave sugar cane unharvested is to destroy it, which is contrary to the situation in the rubber plantations, where it was found that neglecting the growth actually aided it.

French Debt Prospects.

Reports from time to time that France and the United States are approaching a settlement of the debt problem aroused interest in the financial district, but bankers well versed in the international situation said yesterday that they did not believe Secretary Mellon and the other members of the American Debt Commission would enter into an agreement with any foreign country until the Italian arrangement had finally been ratified by Congress. As this is not expected until some time near adjournment, a settlement with France is considered unlikely before next year. It was pointed out, however, that if the Debt Commission should reach an agreement with France, the present embargo against French loans in the American market would automatically be removed without waiting for ratification by Congress.

Passenger Revenues Gain.

In view of the comments in the railroads' 1925 reports on the increase of motor competition, railroad men found the revenue traffic statistics for January issued yesterday by the Interstate Commerce Commission of particular interest. Passenger revenues for that month, the commission reported, increased to $89,481,743, as compared with $88,683,229 in January, 1925. Revenue passengers carried one mile totaled 2,912,826,000, as compared with 2,890,218,000. The average revenue per passenger mile was 3.072, as compared with 3.068 cents. It is recognized that that public finds railroad travel more attractive in cold weather than in warm, but if the same ratio of increase can be maintained throughout the year, railroad officials will be greatly encouraged.

Economy and Extravagance.

Bankers who gathered yesterday to listen to an address by Sir Robert M. Kindersley, G. B. E., one of the directors of the Bank of England, were particularly interested in a theory he advanced regarding the relative advantages of economy and extravagance in this country and in England. He said that as one of the leaders in the thrift movement in England, he had come to be regarded as a high priest of economy, but that if he should shift his headquarters to New York he would preach just as earnestly for extravagance. It was only by economy in Europe and extravagance in the United States, he said, that a proper adjustment of post-war problems could be effected. By persuading all the populace to save intelligently, home industries could be built up and in addition London could become one of the principal lenders of money in the world market, which would promote the export markets for British products. On the other hand, the large spending by all classes in America was helping build up this country's great industries and also providing a market for European goods, which must be exported if conditions are to be stabilized.

MONEY.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14, 1926.

Stock Exchange call money continued easy as the tide of withdrawals receded to a purely nominal figure. After starting at 4½ per cent., rate later dropped to 4, while outside trades were arranged a fraction under the prevailing board charge. Time money market was dull and featureless. A few trades were made at 4⅝ per cent. for average length maturities, a concession on the part of lenders who held most bulk of their money at 4½ per cent. Commercial paper and acceptances were unchanged.

Risky Speculation

Intelligent Investing

"$1,000 earned by hard work is worth more than $10,000 made in speculation," said the late John W. Gates.

Money made in speculation as a rule goes back into speculation, and eventually slips through the fingers of the speculator. Statistics have been quoted to prove that 97% of margin traders in the long run lose—2% break even and only 1% win. Unless you have large resources and can afford to take heavy losses if necessary, you will be better off if you avoid speculation and buy Guaranteed investments exclusively.

Thousands of men and women who have suffered severe mental strain and disastrous losses through the purchase of speculative securities have turned to our Guaranteed Mortgage Certificates as a carefree, panic-proof investment. These certificates which pay Guaranteed returns and never fluctuate in value, offer one of the best and surest means of building a fortune through systematic purchase over a period of years. Issued for any amount odd or even from $100 to $100,000 and more.

If you are interested in keeping and increasing the money you have made through hard work you should read our booklet

locked in a safe deposit vault

"I'M sailing for Europe tomorrow," a customer told a Compton representative. "I'll be gone for eight or nine months. See me about bonds when I come back."

The Compton salesman suggested that the William R. Compton Company would be glad to hold his bonds, during his absence, collect coupons and maturing securities, and deposit the proceeds in his bank account. This investor had made no provision for this service, and the Compton suggestion saved him interest on eight or nine thousand dollars' worth of maturing bonds and coupons—enough to pay his passage to Europe.

Compton service provides every possible facility to make investing more profitable to you. It is on the basis of practical, profitable help to investors that the national reputation of this thirty-nine-year-old investment house is built.

EDWARD G. WILMER TO RUN DODGE BROS.

DODGE TO BUYOUT GRAHAMS

Three Brothers Resigning From Executive Positions—F. J. Haynes Becomes New Chairman.

Edward G. Wilmer, formerly Chairman of the Board of Directors of Dodge Brothers, Inc., will assume active charge of the operations of that organization in the position of President, it was announced yesterday. It was also announced that Frederick J. Haynes, former President, was elected Chairman of the board. These changes took place at a meeting of the board yesterday.

Mr. Wilmer, as a result of his new activities, will take up his residence in Detroit. He will resign his position as Chairman of the board of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, which he has held since April, 1923, following his services in rehabilitating the financial structure of that organization.

The Board of Directors of Dodge Brothers, Inc., announced yesterday that the company had decided to exercise its option to acquire the remaining 49 per cent. of the common stock of Graham Brothers, manufacturers of trucks and buses, thus giving Dodge 100 per cent. ownership in this company. As a result, Ray, Robert and Joseph Graham are resigning the executive positionss held by them in Dodge Brothers for the past four months, or since Dodge first acquired a stock interest in Graham Brothers.

Mr. Wilmer, who is a young man compared to the average age of industrial leaders in this country, has attracted considerable attention during the past few years because of his achievements in industrial organization and management. He originally started his business career in a legal capacity, and has since successfully held held executive positions in the mining, chemical, steel and rubber industries. His most notable accomplishment, according to his associates, was the part he played in reorganizing the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company.

The Goodyear company, under Mr. Wilmer's management, his associates pointed out, recovered its position as the largest producer of rubber tires in the world, and went beyond its previous record. In 1925 its gross business totaled $205,999,829, against $170,828,313 in 1920, and net earnings before bond interest and other charges in 1925 were in excess of $26,000,000, the largest in its history.

In 1911, Mr. Wilmer served as head of the legal department of the Milwaukee Coke and Gas Company, which was controlled by the Schlesinger interests of Milwaukee. This was his first business association. Later he became Vice President of the Newport Mining Company, and subsequently Vice President of the Steel and Tube Company of America, when that company was organized in 1918 to acquire the Newport Mining Company, the Iroquois Steel Company and the Mark Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Wilmer is a native of Milwaukee and a graduate of George Washington University. During the war he served as head of the buying section in charge of trench warfare materials, and in that capacity supervised the purchase of large quantities of supplies. He went to France in 1918, and after the armistice resumed his work with the Steel and Tube Company, with which he continued until he took over the task of reorganizing the Goodyear organization.

COURT UPHOLDS STOCK FIRM

Injunction Denied Against Dealers in Gilbert Engineering Shares.

Supreme Court Justice William B. Carswell, in Brooklyn, denied yesterday the application of Attorney General Albert Ottinger for a temporary injunction to restrain Harry A. Kuffler and P. G. Green from continuing to sell stocks and bonds at 80 Wall Street as H. A. King & Co.

The injunction was sought on the ground that the company had sold stock of the Gilbert Engineering and Gold Mining Company under representations that it was of great present value, whereas it was alleged to be speculative stock with an average value of about 20 cents a share. Mr. Kuffler contended in court that he and his associate had never sold the stock without an understanding with the purchaser that it was purely speculative.

WESTERN UNION CO. ADDS CAPITAL STOCK

Holders Vote First Increase in Twenty Years for Offering of Shares to Empolyes.

50,000 TO GO TO WORKERS

Stockholders of the Western Union Telegraph Company in annual meeting yesterday authorized the first increase in the company's capital stock in about twenty years. The increase totals $5,000,000, comprising 50,000 shares of $100 par. At present there is $99,736,727 outstanding capital stock of an authorized amount of $100,000,000.

The new stock is to be sold to employes under a subscription plan at a price of 120. The last sale of this stock was at 138¾. Of the approximately 65,000 employes, about 40,000 are eligible to subscribe under the offer. If all eligible employes exercised their full rights they would exhaust the $5,000,000 issue.

It was said at the offices of the company that whatever might be done with any balance of this block of stock left unsubscribed it would not be used for a stock dividend, if for no other reason than that it would be too small an amount for that purpose. It was announced that beyond re-electing directors the shareholders took no action at the meeting. Later directors re-elected officers.

The offering of stock to employes follows the distribution of $3,300,000 from 1925 income under an income participating plan. In view of the fact that the company will disburse $3,000,000 this year in increased salaries under the merit system, the question of whether there will be a distribution from income this year has not yet been decided by the directors.

Under the plan approved yesterday, stock in the company will be offered to employes who have had one year or more of continuous service prior to May 1. Subscriptions will be received starting May 15, for sixty days, when the offer will expire. Stock for which subscriptions are not received may possibly be offered to employes at a later time, but not without special authorization. It is "to be held in the treasury and disposed of from time to time and on such terms as the stockholders may approve."

Employes may subscribe for one share of stock for each $500 or fraction thereof of annual salary in effect April 20. Subscriptions will be limited to fifty shares, or to about 20 per cent. of annual salary. Payment for the stock must be made in twenty-four monthly instalments and the stock will not be delivered before the lapse of this two-year period. Interest at 6 per cent. a year compounded quarterly will be paid on sums deposited in payment. Delivery of the stock will be made in time for participation in the dividend payable Oct. 15, 1926.

The company yesterday reported gross earnings in March of $32,557,494 against $29,057,903 in March, 1925. Net income after expenses, interest and taxes was $3,413,419 against $3,242,813.

Transit Commission Fixes Date for Hearings—Decision Must Be Made by July 1.

The Long Island Railroad Company on May 1 will actively reopen its fight for a 20 per cent. increase on all commutation, family and school tickets. That date has been fixed by the Transit Commission for the beginning of hearings on the railroad's application, which has been in abeyance now for more than two years.

Because of the expiration of their terms of office, the present members of the Transit Commission, George McAneny, Le Roy T. Harkness and General John F. O'Ryan, are to retire tomorrow. It is likely therefore that the Long Island fare rise will be the first major question to confront the new commission which is to be appointed by Governor Smith.

By the terms of an agreement between the Long Island and the present commission, the increased rate schedule is held under suspension until June 30. As the legal powers of the State regulatory law have been exhausted by successive suspensions since the question was first raised, the railroad, it is said, will probably be able to put its higher tariffs into effect on July 1, unless a definite decision shall have been reached by the commission prior to that date. By starting the hearings on May 1, two months are allowed for the taking of testimony and for arriving at a decision.

George Le Boutillier, Vice President of the road and its active manager, is more than ever determined to get the increased rates. He contends that at the present tariffs the greater part of the Long Island commutation business is unprofitable. Renewal of the effort to get increased fares, on the other hand, will be vigorously opposed by counsel employed by the Association of Long Island Commuters and other civic organizations of Brooklyn and Queens Boroughs.

STERN BROTHERS EARNINGS.

Stern Brothers, in their report for the year ended January 31, 1926, show a net income, after depreciation, reserves and Federal taxes, of $933,765. This is equivalent, after providing for $4 dividend on Class A stock, to $1.06 a share, earned on 200,000 outstanding shares of no par Class B common stock. In the preceding year the net profit was $864,703, or 72 cents a share on the same basis.

Stern Brothers Class A shares have priority to the extent of $4 in dividends annually, and after that the Class B shares draw $2 annually. Following these payments both stocks share equally until an additional $2 is paid on both classes, after which all distributions accrue only to the Class B shares.

Assets of Stern Brothers totaled $13,692,718. Included among these were cash $320,759; accounts receivable, $1,875,907; inventories, $3,332,966; furniture, fixtures, improvements and equipment less depreciation, $540,764; good will and lease, $7,499,600, and deferred charges; $122,722. Total liabilities were $3,129,013, including accounts payable, $889,947; accrued expenses, Federal taxes, etc., $339,066; and capital stock, $1,900,000. Surplus was $10,563,705.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE.

Foreign exchanges were generally lower yesterday. There were a few instances of improved levels, but these gains were just as meagre in size as the reaction so that in effect the session was a dull one of meaningless fluctuations. Dealers attributed the easier tone to the heaviness in London whence came lower cables at our start, this providing the inspiration for moderate offerings and a concession in prices.

Sterling dipped another fraction, to $4.85⅝. French francs dropped 1⅝ points, to 3.42⅛, and the Belgian unit 2⅛ points, to 3.76½ cents. Italian lire was steady at 4.02⅛ cents. Scandinavians were easier on reports that the Norwegian Government was discouraging foreign deposits, limiting these to a certain figure upon which a nominal interest would be paid. This was being attempted, it is believed, to curtail speculation in the exchanges. Holland, Spanish and Swiss were virtually unchanged. Chinese exchanges reacted to new lows, but the Japanese yen rallied ⅛ cent., to 46.38 cents. South Americans were unchanged. Canadian advanced to a premium of 9-64 of 1 per cent.

Alfred Jacobsen Is Vice President—Four Directors Named.

One vice president and four directors of the Amerada Corporation, which until recently was a "closed" corporation, were elected yesterday. The Vice President is Alfred Jacobsen, former managing director of the Mexican Eagle Oil Company. The new directors are Ernest B. Tracy, oil man; Dean Mathey, of Dillon, Reade Co.; John H. Hillman Jr., director of the First National Bank of Pittsburgh; and John M. Lovejoy, Vice President of Amerada, with headquarters in Tulsa, Okla. Mr. Jacobsen's headquarters will be in New York City.

Preliminary figures on earnings for the first quarter of this year show that the net after all charges will equal $1.15 a share earned on the outstanding capital stock, or an annual rate of $4.60 a share.

A substantial increase in earnings for the first quarter of 1926 is reported by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, whose profit for the period was $27,867,985, as against $25,909,639 in the same quarter last year. This increase reflects the generally good business condition of the country, according to Walter S. Gifford, President.

Mr. Gifford told stockholders of efforts by the company to perfect transatlantic telephony to assure its employment for commercial purposes.

"While in the development of two-way transatlantic telephony there are many problems yet to be solved before anything approaching commercial service can be given," Mr. Gifford explained, "it is hoped that some day it will be possible for any telephone user in this country to converse with any one in England or on the Continent.

"Tests of two-way telephone communication with London were made successfully on March 7, a day almost coincident with the fiftieth anniversary of the day on which the first sentence was heard on the telephone. These tests involved the transmission of speech from our headquarters by land wires to the antenna of the Radio Corporation of America on Long Island and thence by wireless across the ocean; and the reception of speech by a wireless station in Northeastern Maine, to which were connected land wires terminating in our New York City headquarters. A corresponding arrangement was made in England, and in all cases the connection between wires and wireless was automatic, so that speech was carried on without interruption. Our continued efforts to develop transoceanic telephony are in line with the policy of the company to provide for the Bell system any improvement in telephony that will increase the range and usefulness of telephone communication."

Appended to the statement was the report of income for the first quarter, which follows:

FINANCIAL ENCYCLOPAEDIA

GROSS EARNINGS: An examination of the total (or gross) earnings of a company for a period of years is usually most instructive. It should indicate whether the business is advancing or declining. If we can, in addition, compare its gross earnings with those of other companies in the same line of business, it is possible to determine with considerable accuracy whether periodical fluctuations are due to external business conditions or to policies or management within the control of the company itself.

The most successful company is ordinarily the one which is able to expand its volume of sales steadily without increasing expenses in the same proportion.

Limited Offering
Hurley Playing Card Company
(A New Jersey Corporation)
7% Cumulative Preferred Stock
Par Value $100

The Preferred Stock is Fully-Paid and Non-Assessable. Dividends payable quarterly as declared. Preferred as to dividends and assets over the Common Stock of the Company. Redeemable as a whole, or in part, at the option of the Company on thirty days' notice at $105 per share and accrued dividends.

BUSINESS The Hurley Playing Card Company was organized in 1924 for the purpose of manufacturing and selling the standard playing card, which has been greatly improved by processes developed and owned by them. It will produce the highest grade of merchandise. The art work and designs have been made by artists of repute. The quality of stock is the best. The precision of the work is especially being stressed. The most important exclusive Hurley feature will be the application to the face of the cards of a process that screens the otherwise intense white surface of the card and reflects to the retina of the eye a softened tone that lessens eye fatigue and relieves nerve tension. The process of treatment as above is covered by five applications for patents, two are basic ones and allowed three are pending and favorable action already noted.

PLANT The plant consists of brick, concrete and steel construction buildings, of the most modern fire-proof type, located at Carlstadt, N. J., on the Erie Railroad. The building was designed especially for this company to conform with the layout of the machinery, in order that economy and time might be effective. There has been no extravagance in the construction. Expenditures have been made with the idea of permanency and future development.

The machinery of this plan is the finest that the engineers were able to secure for the specific purpose. The presses were supplied by the Miehle Printing & Manufacturing Co. The platers, lineniers, punches, etc., have been built to the design and specifications of Company's engineers, by well known manufacturers, in several instances, the machines have been built by the Company itself to conform with the processes put into practice by the Company and held exclusive by it, for its own use. The machine layout is undoubtedly of the most advanced type in the playing card manufacturing business, and, in fact, to a certain degree, the factory should produce more economically because of the equipment used and practices employed.

CAPITALIZATION

$250,000	7% Cumulative Preferred ($100 par)
$500,000	Common ($100 par)

PURPOSE OF ISSUE The proceeds of this issue will be used to provide additional working capital and for the installation of additional machinery needed to bring the Company's production rate to above 5,000,000 decks per year.

THE PLAYING CARD INDUSTRY The playing card is a staple article of merchandise, because of stability of demand quickness of consumption and need of replacement. However, it has all the advantages of a good specialty. The business is not highly competitive. There has never been any record of overproduction or price cutting. Sales outlets are very numerous. Selling costs are extremely low. Profits are large. The demand for playing cards in the United States is met by a few well known corporations, who produce more than 60,000,000 decks per annum, according to the statistics furnished by the United States Government and through importations of English concerns.

The output of the domestic concerns and the merchandise imported is readily taken up by the ever increasing demands of clubs and individuals. Distribution is made through chain stores, stationers, newsdealers and sundry stores.

Upon reference to the published reports of the leading corporations manufacturing playing cards, it will be found that this industry has enjoyed unusual prosperity for a long time. Owing to the Government regulations requiring revenue stamps on each deck of cards sold, accurate records are kept; it is, therefore, not difficult to verify these statements in respect to supply and demand, and the profits made in this industry.

The two leading companies in this industry have shown tremendous earning power since organization. The immensity of the consumption of playing cards can easily be summarized by the fact that the last fiscal year showed a 30% increase over the previous year.

EARNINGS Based on conservative estimates of business already in hand, and the capacity of 5,000,000 decks of cards per year, and allowing a very conservative net profit per deck, the company should show net earnings of about $200,000 the first year of operations.

TOWNSEND RETIRES; 60 YEARS IN BANKING

BEGAN HIS CAREER IN 1866

A record of sixty years of service in one bank, at one location, was completed yesterday by Edward Townsend, former President of the Importers and Traders' Bank, at 247 Broadway. The bank was merged in 1923 with the Equitable Trust Company and since that time Mr. Townsend has been Chairman of the Advisory Committee of the Importers and Traders' office of the Equitable Trust. He announced his retirement yesterday, but remains a large stockholder in the Equitable Trust Company and will continue to make his headquarters at the Importers and Traders' office.

Mr. Townsend is 78 years old and is active and robust. He considered the sixtieth anniversary of his banking service a fitting occasion to carry out his decision to retire. Flowers were banked about his desk yesterday and he received many congratulatory messages from friends and associates.

Mr. Townsend entered the employ of the Importers and Traders' Bank as a junior clerk on April 14, 1866, after having obtained his first business experience as a boy at a branch store of Lord & Taylor's at Grand and Chrystie Streets. Mr. Townsend's first promotion came after he had been with the bank a year, when he was made head correspondence clerk. For six years he continued at this work, answering every letter of the bank on the day it was received.

In 1873 Mr. Townsend was appointed to his first official position, becoming assistant cashier. In 1880 he was appointed cashier, the executive officer of the bank, and he served in that position until 1902, when he was named President.

Mr. Townsend in 1916 resigned as President at his own request and became Chairman of the board. H. H. Powell was named President in his place. He chose the fiftieth anniversary of his service with the bank to make this change. In 1923, when the Equitable Trust Company took over the Importers and Traders' Bank, Mr. Townsend was appointed Chairman of the Advisory Committee of the Importers and Traders' office.

All of Mr. Townsend's service has been at the 247 Broadway address. That was the site of the original Importers and Traders' Bank, which was founded as a State bank in 1855 and became a national bank about ten years later. In 1907 the bank's old building was demolished and the present structure erected. The bank always has been regarded as one of the strong financial institutions of the city, and it developed in many lines under Mr. Townsend's guidance.

Although reticent and little given to publicity, Mr. Townsend has been a prominent figure in New York banking for many years. He was a member of the Clearing House Committee several times during its most active years, in the period before the establishment of the Federal Reserve System, and played an important part in shaping the executive policies of the Clearing House.

Mr. Townsend said the only rules he could lay down for success were good health and joy in one's work.

FERTILIZER TRADE GAINS.

Chemicals Holding Up Despite Seasonal Drop in Some Lines.

Despite evidence of decreasing activity in some manufacturing lines, consumption of chemicals continues at the high rates established throughout recent months, according to Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering. The lessening activity is a seasonal occurrence, and is well offset by more extended operations in other lines, the publication reports. Price changes were infrequent last month.

"Outstanding in developments has been the pronounced gain in activity in the fertilizer trade," the publication reports," as compared with the early months of 1925. Favorable conditions also obtain in the rubber, petroleum refining, paper and pulp and chemical industries. Advances in sulphur prices and the stronger position of sulphuric acid were the most important factors in bringing about a moderate gain in the weighted index number for chemicals. The latter is now 113.25 as compared with 112.06 a month ago, and 112.60 a year ago.

"A decidedly easy tone was manifest in the market for vegetable oils and fats. In the past month both crude and cottonseed oil shared in a steadily declining price movement."

NATIONAL DAIRY MEETING.

Stock Increase Is Voted to Buy Breyer Ice Cream Companies.

At a special meeting yesterday stockholders of the National Dairy Products Corporation approved an amendment to the charter creating $5,000,000 additional preferred stock.

The increase is to acquire the Breyer Corporation, which controls the Breyer Ice Cream Company and the Breyer Ice Cream Company, Inc., of Philadelphia and New York, under terms of a contract recently entered into. This provided that $5,000,000 of Dairy Products preferred stock should be given to the owners of Breyer in partial consideration for the ice cream corporation's assets. Directors of the company were re-elected.

National Cloak and Suit Sales Lower

Sales of the National Cloak and Suit Company for March totaled $4,440,895, a decrease of 6.9 per cent. under the $4,774,163 for March a year ago. Sales for the first quarter of 1926 were $9,782,256, as compared with $10,522,265 in the same period of 1925, or a decrease of 7 per cent.

John Reis, Vice President of the United States Steel Corporation has resigned that position and will retire from active business. Mr. Reis, who was born in Niles, Ohio, in 1861, has devoted his entire business career of forty-five years to the iron and steel industry. He has been affiliated with the United States Steel Corporation since its inception in 1901, and was affiliated with some of the older companies which were taken into the Steel Corporation. Mr. Reis's successor has not yet been selected.

According to his associates Mr. Reis, who is an authority on blast furnace operations, was instrumental in many innovations in the industry.

Mr. Reis comes from a family which established history in the early days of the iron and steel industry. When the Civil War broke out, Mr. Reis's father moved to New Castle, Pa., where he organized the firm of Reis, Brown & Berger. This organization of which the elder Reis was the head, later became the largest manufacturer of rolled iron in the country.

In 1886, when Mr. Reis was 25 years old, he was appointed Vice President and General Manager of the Gogebic Furnace Company, in Michigan. In 1888 he became General Manager of the Nashville Iron, Steel and Charcoal Company. In the next year he went to the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, and in 1893 joined the Oliver Iron and Steel Company of Pittsburgh.

When the National Steel Company was organized in 1889, Mr. Reis was made General Manager of the blast furnace operations, and when this organization was absorbed by the United States Steel Corporation he became affiliated with the latter organization. In 1903 Mr. Reis became assistant to W. E. Corey, President of the Steel Corporation, and in 1911 he was appointed Vice President.

MORE RAIL WORKERS TO ASK RISE IN WAGES

Engineers and Firemen to Follow Lead of Trainmen and Conductors.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, it was learned yesterday, will follow the trainmen and the conductors in petitioning for an increase in wages. The movement is being held in abeyance to determine whether the best results may be obtained from joint or separate applications.

Canvassing of the firemen has disclosed that an overwhelming majority is in favor of new wage demands. They have appointed a committee to confer with representatives of the engineers on a program for handling a joint movement.

If the engineers and firemen ask the same proportionate increase as the trainmen and conductors, railroad men estimate that the total involved for the four brotherhoods would be in excess of $150,000,000 annually. The unions are basing their arguments on the plea that the railroads are enjoying the greatest prosperity in their history. This is said to be untrue by railroad spokesmen, who declare that the average of the last five years is one of the lowest on record. They assert that, despite large capital expenditures to improve railroad property and render operation more efficient, the carriers are still far short of earning what the Transportation act regards as a fair return and what is necessary to re-establish their credit.

STEEL OUTPUT SAGS, THOUGH STILL HIGH

Decline in New Business Noted in Chicago—Auto Industry Taking Less Tonnage.

MILLS FIVE PER CENT. OFF

Conditions in the steel industry remain materially as they were during the first quarter, with production maintaining a high rate, although inquiries for some steel products have fallen off slightly and a moderate decrease in new business has been noted in Chicago, where conditions up to now have been exceptionally promising.

According to Iron Age, activity of the United States Steel Corporation is now placed slightly above 95 per cent. as compared with an operation up to full ingot capacity for more than half of March. In the Pittsburgh and Youngstown regions the average production is a little under 80 per cent., whereas during the latter part of March it was 5 per cent. higher.

Iron Age says:

"At 12,450,000 tons the country's steel production in the first quarter of the year was 300,000 tons greater than in the like period of 1925. But a year ago there were indications that consumers' stocks had grown under the heavy shipments of the first three months, whereas today the meagerness of such stocks is a matter of comment. Shipments of steel to the railroads and the building trades are holding up, but the automobile industry is taking less. Can makers are taking but tin plate at the full rate of their contracts, but are not exercising options on additional amounts, due to the late spring."

Iron Age goes on to say that oil field work shows more promise. One pipe line inquiry has come in for 20,000 tons for 232 miles of eight-inch pipe for Illinois. The Pennsylvania Railroad has bought 2,000 freight and 234 passenger cars; the Burlington, 500 all-steel hopper cars, and a cast iron pipe company 20,000 tons of foreign iron for plants in Birmingham, Ala., and Burlington, N. J. Imports of pig iron rose to 12,643 tons, which arrived at Philadelphia last week. Of this England shipped nearly 7,000 tons and Germany 3,800 tons. French works have just taken municipal contracts covering 9,300 tons of cast iron pipe for Holyoke, Mass., and Norwalk, Conn.

The Iron Trade Review says:

"Steel works operations show little changes from last week. March statistics completed the picture of remarkable record steel production during the first quarter. The past month not only established the highest monthly total and daily average in history, but lifted the three-months' aggregate to the greatest figure for any similar period. March's gross production of 4,491,689 tons brought the total for the first quarter to 12,445,823 tons, which was 296,501 tons and 2.4 per cent. in excess of the same period in 1925. On an annual basis steel ingots were being produced in March at the annual rate of 51,800,000 tons.

"The drop in unfilled bookings of the United States Steel Corporation to 4,379,935 tons on March 31 emphasizes the unusual character of the present situation. In March, 1920, the corporation's unfilled orders totaled almost 10,000,000, yet last month, with production at the highest rate in history, untouched bookings were less than half that amount."

A. E. Fitkin Sails for London.

A. E. Fitkin, President of the National Public Service Corporation and of Fitkin Utilities, Inc., sailed yesterday to attend a conference in London of public utility men who will discuss European rights for the Pier process of water gas manufacture. The process, discovered by gas makers of the Western United Corporation, makes possible the generation of water gas through a 100 per cent. use of soft coal.

Railroad's Income Rose From $35,753,204 in 1924—Earns $15.40 on the Common.

ALTON LINE'S STOCK SOLD

R. S. Lovett, Chairman, Announces That All the Preferred Shares Held Have Been Disposed Of.

Net income of $38,231,060 after taxes and charges was earned by the Union Pacific Railroad in 1925, according to the annual report made public yesterday. This is equivalent after preferred dividends and sinking fund requirements to $13.46 a share on $222,391,600 outstanding common stock and compares with $35,753,204 or $14.28 a share in 1924.

The feature of the report is a statement by Judge Robert S. Lovett, Chairman of the board, that all of the preferred stock of the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company held by the Union Pacific has been sold.

"In the report for 1922 advice was given that, receivers having been appointed for the property of the Chicago & Alton on Aug. 30, 1922, upon careful consideration of the conditions and prospects of that property, the Board of Directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company had approved writing out of the investment account as a loss the entire cost, $8,946,782 of the preferred, and $4,312,750 of the cost of the $8,417,000 face value of general mortgage 20-year 6 per cent. bonds of the Chicago & Alton owned by the Union Pacific. Twelve thousand five hundred shares were sold in that year, and the remainder, 90,931, was sold during 1925. The proceeds from the sale of this stock, $1,557,252, were credited to the corporate surplus account—reserve for depreciation of securities—to which account the entire cost was charged in 1922 when written off as a loss."

Stockholders of the company numbered 50,455 as of March 13, 1926, against 50,517 the previous year, a decrease of 62. During the year $13,229,030 was invested in extensions, improvements and equipment. Against this were deductions of $3,172,854, the cost of property, real estate and equipment retired, leaving a net increase in road and equipment of $10,056,175. Gross revenue of the Union Pacific and all subsidiaries for the year was $198,039,900, against $199,035,117 in 1924; $211,318,465 in 1923, and $192,877,121 in 1922.

The decline of $996,216 in gross from the previous year was offset by a reduction in operating expenses of $2,768,618. Maintenance of way declined $1,640,592, or 8.5 per cent., due to less necessity for repairs and renewals of buildings, signals and bridges, and to lower prices for materials, principally ties. New steel rails were laid in 329.9 miles and second-hand rails on 128.4 miles. Decrease of $461,750, or 1.2 per cent., in equipment maintenance, was due to lower labor costs.

Decrease of $1,020,224, or 1.7 per cent., in rail transportation expenses was principally due to further increase in the average freight train load hauled and decreased damage payments. There were increases in payments of approximately $360,000 resulting from higher wage schedules and $500,000 resulting from advance in the rise of locomotive fuel consumed.

The absence of new legislation since the passage of the Transportation act has enabled the railroads to adapt themselves to conditions and proceed with an assurance of stability which has been largely lacking in the past, says President W. B. Storey.

"Your company," Mr. Storey informs stockholders, "has made arrangements to establish automobile service for Indian detours in the Southwest. These detours will be co-ordinated with both west and east bound passenger train service.

"The so-called south plains country of West Texas, which has been well covered and well served by the lines of your company, has shown such splendid growth and development that applications have been filed by the Fort Worth & Denver City, the Frisco System and the Texas, Panhandle & Gulf, an independent line, to build into that territory."

D. & R. G. SHOWS A GAIN.

The Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad in its second annual report since reorganization reported operating revnues for 1925 of $33,629,463, an increase of $617,905, or 1.87 per cent., over 1924. Surplus after interest charges was $2,562,986, compared with a deficit of $1,713,251 at the end of 1924.

Freight revenues increased 3.80 per cent. over 1924 as the result of carrying an increase of 514,244 tons, or 4.90 per cent. The principal commodities contributing to the increase were bituminous, precious ores and concentrates, bullion, sugar beets, lumber and fresh vegetables.

Passenger revenue decreased 5.28 per cent., due to competition of bus lines and private automobiles. There was a slight increase in long-haul passenger traffic.

CYRUS S. EATON GETS UNITED ALLOY STEEL

E. A. Langenbach to Quit as Board Chairman to $6,000,000 Deal for Control.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, April 14.—Cyrus S. Eaton of Otis & Co. and associates today acquired control of the United Alloy Steel Corporation of Canton. It was revealed by E. A. Langenbach, who said he had sold a substantial part of his stock and would retire from the chairmanship of the board at the annual meeting, April 20.

The deal, understood to involve approximately $6,000,000, was one of the largest transactions of its kind ever made in Cleveland territory and marks C. S. Eaton's second important steel connection. Last year he and his associates financed the Trumbull Steel Company when that company was in financial difficulties and by so doing retained control in Northern Ohio.

Today's announcement is said to indicate that control of the United Alloy will also remain in Ohio. According to a statement from Eaton's office it also sets at rest many merger rumors.

Negotiations leading to a consolidation of the Central Steel Company at Massillon and the United Alloy last Fall fell through owing to a difference of an eighth of a share of stock in the merger terms.

The United Alloy Steel Corporation, a pioneer in its field, does an annual business of about $36,000,000 and its payrolls run about $15,000,000 a year. It has 7,000 employes and about 2,500 stockholders.

Last year the company exceeded all record in production and sales. Mr. Langenbach said: "I do not believe there could be a more favorable time for me to pass active management of the corporation on to younger men than now."

To Call $3,373,000 Power Bonds.

An issue of $3,373,000 of 6½ per cent. bonds of the West Virginia Water and Electric Company, due in 1942, will be called at 105 on May 1, it was learned yesterday. This is part of a program for a large bond issue planned by the Appalachian power system, which is owned by the American Gas and Electric Company. The issue may be as large as $35,000 and will consist of first and refunding mortgage bonds. Since Feb. 1 more than $23,000,000 bonds of companies within the system have been called.

Mr. A. Lyle Leverich, President of the Corporation, has summarized his letter regarding the business of the Company as follows:

HISTORY: On March 21, 1921, the Leverich Realty Corporation was formed for the purpose of engaging in the purchase, operation and development of high grade income producing properties located especially in Brooklyn Heights and financial districts for permanent investment, with a capital of approximately $10,000. The name LEVERICH has been identified with successful real estate operations in this borough for over 70 years. My father, vice-president of our Corporation, has enjoyed a most successful career as a real estate operator in Brooklyn. Each year since the Company's incorporation a substantial profit has been made.

MANAGEMENT: The management of the Company is vested in men who have long been identified with successful Brooklyn realty operations, and it is due to this type of management the Corporation owns its tremendous success. The advantages we have at our command enable us to sell properties which will always be in demand and at prices that are attractive, thereby doubly protecting the stockholders' interest.

Leverich Office Building
" Court
" Building
" Gardens
" Towers (under construction)

EARNINGS AND GROWTH: The success of the Corporation is best shown by the Capitalization being increased to one hundred times the original amount. Gross income from operation of properties, brokerage, insurance and other sources since the Company's incorporation has been approximately 2½ times dividend requirements. This income will be considerably increased upon the completion of the LEVERICH TOWERS HOTEL.

The Corporation has paid dividends on its common and preferred stock since its inception, 7% per annum on the cumulative preferred and $10.00 per annum on the common, the majority of which is in the hands of the officers and directors of the Company.

PURPOSE OF NEW FINANCES: The proceeds of the sale of the balance of our 7% preferred stock will be utilized in connection with the purchase and construction of our most recent and important undertaking, the $4,000,000 LEVERICH TOWERS APARTMENT HOTEL, at Clark, Willow and Pineapple Streets, Brooklyn, which will net the corporation, when completed, an average income of $300,000 per annum net, on a 42-year lease. This present sale of the balance of our preferred stock concludes our present financing program.

SURPLUS OF IMPORTS IN TRADE OF MARCH

BLAME COTTON AND RUBBER

WASHINGTON, April 14 (AP).—Foreign trade of the United States continued to show an unfavorable balance during March, when exports were $375,000,000 against imports of $445,000,000. The adverse balance for the calendar year thus was increased to approximately $125,000,000, an excess of $55,000,000 in imports having been shown for January and February.

For the nine months of the current fiscal year ended in March exports totaled $3,671,640,242, while imports were $3,413,089,200. The favorable balance of $258,551,042 thus shown compared with a balance in this country's favor of $946,780,648 for the same period last fiscal year.

A statement by the Commerce Department said that the decrease of approximately $79,000,000 in exports for March compared with the same month last year was largely due to the decreased quantity and lower price of cotton. Exports of that commodity last month fell $42,000,000 below March, 1925. The decline in grain and grain products movement, which fell off about $16,000,000 last month compared with March, 1925, also entered into the situation. The department attributed the increase in imports of approximately $60,000,000 over March of last year principally to the advance in rubber prices.

Exports of gold last month were valued at $4,224,564, as against imports of $43,412,576. The excess of imports of $39,188,012 compared with an export excess for March last year of $17,767,694.

CITY TO TAKE OVER GAS CO.

Cape May (N. J.) Officials Say Poor Service Prompts Drastic Move.

CAPE MAY, N. J., April 14.—City Manager Paul A. Volcker of this city has notified the Cape May Illuminating Company that the city will take over its plant on May 1 on account of poor conditions at the plant and the alleged poor service to thousands of users of gas. Last Fall city officials asked the New Jersey Utilities Commission to investigate the plant of the illuminating company, which is owned by New York and Philadelphia capitalists. The Utilities Commission sent an inspector to this city, but nothing was accomplished. In addition, the gas company owes the city $17,000 on back taxes, which is one of the reasons for the drastic move on the part of the city officials.

It is reported that City Manager Volcker and Mayor William R. Shepperd have said that they are determined to make the gas company give improved service if the city takes over the plant on May 1. It is expected that a fight in the courts will ensue between the city and the company.

KURN OB FRISCO STOCK SUIT

Payment on Preferred Lies With Directors, President Says.

ST. LOUIS, April 14 (AP).—James M. Kurn, President of the Frisco Railroad System, said today that not until reading a newspaper here yesterday afternoon did he become aware of the suit brought against the Frisco system by Carl W. Brown in behalf of the preferred stockholders. The suit alleges that the railroad, while failing to pay accumulated preferred stock dividends, has resumed the payment of common stock dividends in violation of an agreement with the preferred stockholders at the time of the reorganization in 1916.

"We can see no grounds whatsoever for the filing of such a suit," Mr. Kurn said. "In the first place, the reorganization plan and agreement left it to the discretion of the Board of Directors as to when dividends should be declared on both the preferred and common stock."

The statement declares that the dividends on the preferred are not cumulative and that since declaration of dividends on the preferred as of Oct. 1, 1924, the preferred stockholder has received his dividends quarterly.

In an action brought in Federal Court in Missouri, Mr. Brown seeks to compel the railroad to pay $3,045,732 which he alleges is due holders of the company's $4,557,500 6 per cent. preferred stock.

RUBBER PRICES OFF IN ACTIVE TRADING

Decline in Crude Futures Goes to Level Unmatched Since Last May.

SPOT SHEETS DOWN A CENT

Business Reported Brisk on the Exchange and in the Markets Outside.

In a broad and active trading session, crude rubber futures continued lower again yesterday. The declines carried prices off more than a cent, to levels unmatched since last May. Business was very brisk throughout. 354 contracts changing hands. Six months were traded in, but the bulk of the turnover was confined to the nearby positions, the more distant deliveries attracting only nominal interest.

May and July, the two most active positions, closed with a loss of 120 points. December, January and March dropped 140 points, and September 130. In London, reaction also was the keynote of the trading, spot sheets yielding ¾d. to 23/32d.

	High.	Low.	Close.	Tuesday's Close.
July	48.00	47.10	47.20	48.40
September	47.40	46.50	46.50	47.80
December	46.10	46.00	*45.10	46.50
January	46.30	45.40	*44.70	46.10
March	45.50	45.50	*43.90	45.30

*Nominal.

Other months closed: June 49, August 46.80, October 46, November 45.50, February 44.30. Spots were quoted at 49.20.

The trend of prices in the outside market followed those on the Exchange. The reaction carried spot sheets down a cent, to 49 cents, and first latex crêpe fully as much, to 50 cents. The volume of business was large, and the grades dealt in were as broad as on the Exchange.

	May-July. Spot.	June.	Sept.
Ribbed smoked sheets	.50	.49	.47
First latex crepe	.50	.49	.48
Amber No. 3	.46	.45	.44
Clean thin brown crepe	.46	.45	.44
Para up-river	.43	.42	.41

On the Cocoa and Rubber Exchange, four contracts were sold. These were two May at 49 cents and two July at 48 cents.

WHEAT MARKET SHIFTS LITTLE

Belated Eastern Order for 1,500,000 Bushels Helps Price at the Finish.

MAY GAINS PART OF A CENT

Export Trade Is Said to Have Reached 1,000,000 Bushels—Corn and Rye Lower.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 14.—There was a material let-up in the Eastern short covering in May wheat and while local bulls were able to advance values to a new high on the present movement on all deliveries early, the finish was easy, with prices ¾ cent higher to ⅝ lower, the latter on the September. May showed congestion at times, while the new crop months were more active, with considerable profit taking on the hard spots.

An order to buy 1,500,000 bushels of July credited to an Eastern operator was a factor in making a strong rally from the low point in the latter delivery. Closing of spreads between here and the Northwest caused the latter markets to go to a wider discount under Chicago. Liverpool closed 1@1¼d higher. Buenos Aires was ½ cent lower at the last.

Favorable crop reports continue to come from the Southwest, but mention of a poor prospect is frequently received from the Central West, where the crop has a relatively low condition.

As a result of the falling off in the trade in the May, commencing tomorrow the July delivery will be traded in on the edge of the pit, and the May in the centre, which will result in slower reporting of orders in the latter.

It is the gossip of the trade that a leading Eastern operator has not completed his covering of short May as yet, but did little here during the day. Late break in the stock market in New York led to fairly aggressive buying of bids for tomorrow on all grains by the local trade.

Owing to the small stocks of wheat here unsold, local handlers are in no position to sell any material quantity to mills, and to a large extent the demand must be taken care of elsewhere.

Export demand at the seaboard was reported as fairly brisk, with sales of 1,000,000 bushels in all positions, partly durum.

Futures in Duluth were firm throughout the day. Winnipeg messages claimed that the Canadian pool had sold the bulk of the Manitobas it had at the head of the lakes.

There is little prospect of lake navigation opening for a week or more at any of the Northern ports, and the late season already is causing apprehension, as a large amount of grain is sold for shipment via Montreal.

Primary arrivals today were 389,000 bushels; week ago, 427,000; last year, 611,000. Shipments were 581,000 bushels; week ago, 389,000; last year, 537,000.

Shorts in corn covered early, and caused a fair advance, but the market weakened toward the last on commission house selling which found support lacking and the finish was ½ to ⅝ cent lower. It is claimed that elevator interests have changed over hedges on around 10,000,000 bushels of corn from the May to the July and have been persistent buyers of May and sellers of the deferred deliveries for some days. The bulk of the exchanging today was around four cents difference. Cash basis was 1½ cents higher to 1 cent lower with dry heavyweight grain wanted.

Primary arrivals today were 421,000 bushels; week ago, 555,000; last year, 714,000; shipments, 443,000 bushels; week ago, 373,000; last year, 356,000.

Futures in oats were dull and ⅛ to ¼ cent higher with fair commission house buying offsetting the effect of the break in corn.

Rye declined ½ to ⅝ cent with wheat which offset buying for foreign account. Export sales of 150,000 bushels were reported at the seaboard.

NEW JERSEY WHEAT LAGS.

Reported 79% Normal, Against 88% Last Year—Rye 82% Normal.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 14.—According to a report made public today by the State Department of Agriculture, Winter wheat on April 1 was 79 per cent. of normal, as compared with 88 per cent. of normal on the same date last year.

The poor condition was declared due to late seeding and unfavorable growing weather last Fall, together with the lack of snow protection and alternate freezing and thawing this Spring.

The condition of the rye crop was said to be 82 per cent. of normal, against 90 per cent. of normal last year.

Available farm labor was reported as 58 per cent. of normal, and the average price was estimated at $49 a month with board and $73 without board, or from $2.00 to $3.40 a day.

COTTON UNAFFECTED BY MARCH FIGURES

MARKET WEAKENS LATER

Covering of May Hedges Continues to Furnish Bulk of Trading—Light Outside Demand.

Announcement that a record quantity of cotton had passed through domestic mills in March had no more than a negligible effect on the futures market yesterday. An advance of 10 points found cotton for sale, and later weakness left prices only 1 to 7 points higher than Tuesday's close.

Covering of May hedges continued to furnish the bulk of trading, spot interests selling May contracts wanted at about 56 points over July and taking later months in exchange. For a time during the morning both new and old crop positions strengthened under the influence of large consumption and predictions of showery weather over the major portion of the belt for today. Absence of outside demand left fluctuations within narrow limits and an easier tone prevailed during the afternoon.

The weekly weather report indicated slow progress in planting operations, particularly west of the river, where very little was accomplished during the week. With the exception of extreme southern portions of Texas, where the crop made a good advance, cold weather has hindered germination of early planted seed. In Florida, replanting has been necessary. During March, Texas rainfall amounted to 4.88 inches which was two inches above normal and compares with .63 inches last year. Owing to condition of the soil, according to Southern advices, unusually favoring weather conditions will be necessary the coming six weeks to enable planters to seed the area intended for cotton this year.

Silk Coats Have Most Call.

The biggest demand in the coat division of the market, continues to be for silk garments, with those of twills holding much less interest for the coat department buyer. The latter is said to have fair quantities of twill coats in stock now which have moved only slowly. Reorders are therefore mostly for silk coats, with black satin, ribbed silk and moires the most favored weaves. The cape coat style is still the leading seller, with the black and white treatment of contrasting fur and silk retaining favor.

Gray Goods Not So Active.

There was some slacking up in demand for gray goods here yesterday, although a fair volume of print-cloths changed hands during the day. For spot delivery these constructions were sold: 38½-inch 64-60s at 7⅞ cents; 38½-inch 64-56s at 7½ cents; 38½-inch 48-squares at 6 cents, and 38½-inch 44-40s at 5⅝ cents. In the few sheeting sales of the day, were spot 40-inch 2.85s at 12 cents and 36-inch 5.50s, for this months' delivery, at 6¼ cents. Spot business in drills included 37-inch 3.95s at 9 cents and 30-inch 3.25s at 10 cents. Spot 72-80 pajama checks were available at 10 cents, with contracts ranging down to 9½ cents according to the lateness of delivery. Good Eastern makes of 87½-inch 4.87-yard sateens were reported in the market at 11¼ cents, which is the general quotation on Southern goods of that construction.

Adjusting Consumers' Complaints.

Standardizing of retail methods for adjusting customers' complaints will receive attention at the seventh annual convention of the Controllers' Congress of the National Retail Dry Goods Association. The convention will be held at the Hotel Niagara, Niagara Falls, from May 10 to 13. While the adjustment of customers' complaints is ordinarily allied closely with the merchandise management and the service departments of the store, executives of the Controllers' Congress believe there is a promising opportunity to apply the methods of the controller's office to setting up more effective procedure for attacking this problem. The experience of many stores in this field is now being collected for presentation at the convention in order that it may be resolved into practical standards for all stores to follow.

March Burlap Shipments Heavier.

Shipments of burlaps from Calcutta to North American ports were larger last month than in February, according to a cable received here yesterday by C. E. Rockstroh & Co., Inc. The March shipments were given as 94,000,000 yards, of which 16,000,000 were shipped to Pacific Coast ports. The March total compares with shipments of 89,000,000 yards in February, and with 96,959,000 yards in March, 1925. Total shipments from Jan. 1 to April 1 amounted to 266,002,000 yards, or a monthly average of 88,666,000. The corresponding total for 1925 was 280,710,000 yards, or a monthly average of 93,570,000. With consumption in the United States averaging around 90,000,000 yards of burlap a month, it is apparent that shipments from Calcutta so far this year have been slightly under the country's requirements.

Men's Shoe Sales Get Good Start.

Following one of the best Spring seasons experienced in the higher-grade lines of men's shoes for many years, makers of this merchandise report an excellent start of retail buying of Fall lines. Increases in Spring business amounting to from 35 to 50 per cent., in pairs, over that of last year are told of by prominent houses in this end of the trade, and early indications are that these gains will be duplicated on Fall shoes. In the new lines quite a few Blucher models in oxfords are shown, in both custom and brogue effects. Fancy wing tips are also seen on several of the new custom and brogue styles. The leading shades for the new season are medium tan and black. A steady trend of demand toward the better qualities of men's footwear is reported, and it is said to be reflected in a growing call for benchgrade shoes.

Hat Demand Disappointing.

While there has been a slight pick-up recently in the demand, the retail turnover of men's hats has been very slow and there is much complaint in the trade all the way from the manufacturer to the retailer. The reorder season for the manufacturer will be about the shortest in recent years, as there is now only a month left before the straw-hat season begins and then sales of felts will be almost entirely confined to the lightweight versions. The lighter shades are being stressed by the stores, and the tendency of hats of these colors to soil easily may be productive of a bigger business than yet appears evident. Snap brim styles are receiving considerable attention in the new merchandise, with fancy bands also well to the fore.

Must Conform to Silhouette.

In its formal announcement to the millinery trade of the selection of May 3 as the opening date of the wholesale Summer millinery season the Trade Development Committee of the Eastern Millinery Association lays considerable stress on the harmful effects to business of a single type of hat for wear by women of all ages and for all occasions. The committee points out that the silhouette styles necessitate hats to conform to them, and emphasizes the need of producing models for the new season that will enhance, through graceful lines and attractive trimmings, whatever natural points of beauty the wearers may possess. The assertion is made that women's apparel, both for every day and dress wear, is becoming more ornate, with the silhoutte the underlying idea. It is also pointed out that there is a tendency apparent to make even tailored clothes more feminine in appearance by ornamentation and trimming.

Raw Silk Situation.

While a minimum price of 1,650 yen has been set for sale of double extra cracks at Yokohama, there has been disposal of small stocks at 1,630 and 1,640 yen. Some buying for shipment during the remainder of this month is going on in Japan and will probably be sufficient to uphold the minimum level, according to E. Geril & Co. The firm holds it questionable whether this condition will prevail throughout May when cocoon buying starts for the new season. The whole market situation is credited with depending upon developments in the manufacturing trade here. At present the hosiery industry continues a steady consumption of raw silk. The broad silk trade is sharply curtailing and the month will show a marked decline in consumption. Crack XX was quoted here yesterday at $6.30, XX at $6.20 and X at $6.10.

Prices Lower on Fall Silks.

That broad silk prices for Fall will be lower than for the Spring season is taken for granted, interest centring mainly on the extent of the decline. Opinions in the manufacturing trade seem to indicate that the recession may average from 10 to 15 per cent., depending upon the type of goods and the amount of silk used in its construction. The amount of this revision downward may look small to some buyers who have been formulating their idea of prices from the slashing which has prevailed on certain types of Spring and Summer silks. Reductions of as much as 35 per cent. have been made on some of these goods. Manufacturers, however, point out that such reductions involved a sacrifice of goods already on hand and could not serve as a guide to prices on goods to be manufactured for the Fall.

No Feature to Cotton Goods.

Feature is lacking to the business now passing in the local cotton goods trade. Jobbers are placing a steady filling-in business on practically all lines, but there is nothing about it, either in character of volume, that is worthy of particular comment. Sellers of ginghams are shipping a few of them all the time for stock replenishment purposes, but buying of this merchandise for Fall has not been any too good so fan Some of the finer branded dress ginghams have moved well, and a number of the larger wholesalers have bought general lines of ginghams quite freely. The rank and file of the jobbers, however, have yet to place the bulk of their business for the new season. A spurt in Southern buying of all classes of cottons is looked for after the annual convention of the Southern Wholesalers' Association in New Orleans next week, but in the meantime not much activity is expected.

GRADE CROSSING HEARING.

Staten Island Railway Sets Cost of Elimination at $700,000.

According to a report presented by the Staten Island Railway engineers at a hearing before the Transit Commission yesterday on the proposed elimination of the grade crossing at Bay Street and Willow Avenue, Clifton Junction, Staten Island, the projected improvement would necessitate appropriating land from the estate of George W. Vanderbilt, the Scott Estate, Inc., the Staten Island Edison Company, the K. Hawkins Coal Company and the New York and Richmond Gas Company.

E. L. Gosnel, assistant to the chief engineer of the Staten Island Railway, put the cost of the improvement at $700,000. H. S. Hensel, counsel for the railroad, held that the improvement would involve an expenditure of more than the road's investment in the branch line, one-half the cost of which his company would have to pay.

E. C. Bridgeman, President of the Staten Island Savings Bank, denounced the delay in obtaining relief as "an outrage." He said that for sixty-eight years he had been a resident of Clifton and that for the last fifteen years the elimination of the grade crossing had been promised.

The hearing was adjourned until 10:30 A. M., April 28.

A judgment for $2,178,594 was filed in the Supreme Court yesterday by Mrs. Heloise Durant Rose of New City, against her brother, William W. Durant, a real estate broker at 501 Fifth Avenue. Mrs. Rose sued originally for a share of the estate of their father, Dr. Thomas Clark Durant, who was credited with organizing and building the Union Pacific Railway, and in 1903 she got a judgment for $760,365, but was unable to collect any material sum. In 1916 she obtained another judgment for $1,360,371, which included interest on the original sum. The present judgment is for the last-named sum with interest for ten years.

When the suit was brought against him recently, Mr. Durant said he would not defend it because he had no funds and would be unable to pay any judgment obtained against him. He contended that his sister's suit was without merit. He is employed by his wife who conducts a real estate business under the name of A. C. Durant, Inc., he said.

Lease of 450 Fifth Avenue.

A lease of the building and stores at 450 Fifth Avenue, owned and occupied by the Mirror, to the I. Miller Shoe Company was closed yesterday. It was announced by I. Gainsburg, attorney in the transaction, that the term is for twenty-one years, with two renewal periods of twenty-one years each. RESTRICTION CASE BEGINS.

Benj. Winter Sues for Permission to Build on Fifth Avenue Block.

The trial of the suit in behalf of Benjamin Winter, buyer of the William K. Vanderbilt residence at Fifty-second Street and Fifth Avenue, for the removal of restrictions against business buildings in the block between Fifty-second and Fifty-third Streets and Fifth and Sixth Avenues, began yesterday before Supreme Court Justice O'Malley.

Mr. Winter, who also bought the homes of Bernard N. Baruch and former Ambassador Henry White, adjoining the Vanderbilt mansion on the southwest corner, got permission from the building authorities to erect a thirty-story structure, but in order to remove all cloud to the title he required the assent of all the adjoining property owners. All of the 106 owners, either consented or defaulted in the suit except three: Joseph F. Simmons, T. J. Oakley-Rhinelander and Philip Rhinelander.

S. Stanwood Menken, counsel for Mr. Winter, produced witnesses who told of the changes in the district in recent years. Augustus B. Schermerhorn, who has lived in the block since 1868, said that when he went there he could see Central Park and Forty-third Street from his windows. A brook ran through Sixth Avenue and alongside were rocks sixty feet high, surmounted by squatters shanties. Mr. Winter, who was also a witness, told of the invasion of business buildings into the district. The trial will be continued today.

Fair weather will prevail almost generally east of the Mississippi River during Thursday and Friday. The temperature will be lower Thursday and Thursday night throughout the Washington forecast district, except in the lower lake region and Florida. Apple Supply Far Above Average.

CHICAGO, April 14 (AP).—Reports from the Government Bureau of Agricultural Economics show that the national supply of apples in cold storage is 44 per cent. over the total a year ago and 30 per cent. above the average of the last five years. City wholesale prices of apples are fully one-third below the 1925 levels and shipments are double the volume. Nevertheless, dealers are in doubt whether apples on hand will be in active competition with the new crop.

FORTUNE TO RELATIVES

Catherine Taylor Moulton, granddaughter of Moses Taylor, first President of the National City Bank, who had been estranged for several years from her youngest daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Roosa White, expressed her joy over becoming reconciled a few months before her death by giving to her daughter a pearl necklace appraised at $246,510. Mrs. Moulton's estrangement from her daughter was due to the latter's marital differences with her husband, Lloyd Aspinwall, from whom she was divorced prior to her marriage to Theodore T. White of Great Neck, L. I.

These facts were disclosed yesterday when Deputy State Tax Commissioner Loughman filed the transfer tax report in the estate of Mrs. Moulton, who died on Sept. 13, 1925, at her country place in New Rochelle. The statements concerning the gift of the necklace were made to show that it was not subject to tax, because it was not given by Mrs. Moulton in contemplation of death.

Had Bank Securities.

The estate was appraised at $8,820,479 net. Mrs. Moulton had securities worth $8,349,979, which included 3,207 shares in the National City Bank.

Mrs. Moulton made gifts of $330,019 prior to her death. These gifts consisted of a pearl necklace of 112 stones, which she had divided into two strings of 56 pearls each, giving one each to her daughters, Mrs. White and Miss Mary Taylor Moulton.

The appraisal showed that Mrs. Moulton left to her former son-in-law, Mr. Aspinwall, household effects worth $15,755, $100,000 in cash and the residence at 143 East Fifty-fifth Street, worth $40,000. She also gave to Mr. Aspinwall's present wife, Ellen Harrison Aspinwall, who lives with him at Pasadena, Cal., jewelry worth $1,475 and $10,000 in cash.

The will gave to Miss Moulton $100,000 in cash, $300,000 as a gift made in contemplation of death, jewelry worth $230,657, household effects and a life interest in one-third of the residuary estate, the share being appraised at $2,273,190. A similar share of the residue went to Arthur Julian Moulton, her son, with $600,000 in cash, while Mrs. Elizabeth Roosa White received $19,000 in cash, wearing apparel and jewelry worth 90,000, furniture appraised at $14,512 and a third of the residue. She also is to get the principal of a fund of $47,010 upon the death of May Potter Ross, who has the life interest.

Bequests to Grandchildren.

The will gave to Bessie Catherine and Lloyd Aspinwall, the two children of Lloyd Aspinwall and Mrs. White, jewelry and $150,000 to each in trust.

Among other gifts by Mrs. Moulton in her will was $100,000 to her secretary, Francis S. Vanderveer, and $10,000 each to her friends, Mrs. Alice Marquand Fullerton and Mrs. Seymour Mellor of England, and Mrs. John K. Williams Jr., and $17,000 to members of her household staff.

No tax was imposed on a trust established by Mrs. Moulton in 1919, at the time of the estrangement, by which she set aside property worth more than $1,000,000 for her daughter, Mary, and son, Arthur. Mr. Aspinwall, grandson of General Aspinwall of Civil War fame, sued his wife for a divorce in New Jersey in 1916 after Mrs. Aspinwall had brought an action in Reno which was rejected by the Nevada courts for lack of jurisdiction.

STATE TROOPER FREED IN UPSTATE KILLING

ROCHESTER, N. Y., April 14 (AP).—Howard F. Spellicy, a State trooper, was found not guilty of manslaughter tonight by a Supreme Court jury which had deliberated an hour and a half.

Spellicy was indicted by a Wayne County Grand Jury following the shooting of Robert H. Brooks, a Savannah threshing contractor, in the early morning of Oct. 17, 1925. The case was transferred to Monroe County for trial when it was asserted that feeling against the trooper in Wayne County would not permit a fair trial.

Spellicy answered to his name in a clear voice and his face showed no sign of emotion when the jury's decision was announced. His father, who has been with him throughout the trial, was by his side. Spellicy shook hands with each of the jurymen and thanked them as they filed from the court room. Then he hurried across the street with his father and fellow-troopers to send a telegram to his aged mother, waiting to hear the verdict at the family home in Rome. He has not been relieved from duty and will continue with Troop D of Oneida.

NAVY WANTS PARK LAND.

Theodore Douglas Robinson, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, called on Mayor Walker in the City Hall yesterday in company with Captain J. M. Enochs, representing Rear Admiral Charles P. Plunkett, Commandant of the Navy Yard, and Lieutenant Kendall, in charge of Naval Reserve training. They sponsored the effort to have the city cede fifty-three acres of the Jacob Riis Park, in Rockaway, Queens, to the Federal Government for use as a permanent naval aviation station. A similar effort failed during the Hylan Administration.

Aviator Seeks Bankruptcy.

BOSTON, April 14 (AP).—Alton B. Sherman of Whitman, an aviator, filed a petition in bankruptcy today. Two hospitals and three physicians were his principal creditors. The petition showed liabilities of $1,949 and no visible assets. Three Boston physicians, it was shown, hold claims ranging from $300 to $10 for medical treatment.

Changing the Skyline of Times Square

Rising 35 stories to its observation tower The Paramount Building will change the familiar sky-line of Times Square in a striking way.

Nor is this a structural change alone. It is an integral part of the great up-town march of skyscrapers and big stores, re-zoning areas and multiplying values as they go.

The immense value of the mid-town location of The Paramount Building is anchored forever by the nearness of the Grand Central and Pennsylvania Terminals, which in themselves are master-keys, as it were, to all future transportation development in Greater New York.

Location in The Paramount Building will be a great convenience to clients and employees alike, but it will be even more a source of quiet pride since their business life will be associated with one of the most impressive business homes ever seen anywhere, amid business neighbors of only the highest type.

Preferred locations of offices and floors are being carefully considered from the blue-prints nine months ahead by those who know the value of foresight.

NOTE: 5th to 12th floors inclusive will be occupied by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Producers of Paramount Pictures, whose activities radiate through 70 countries. A number of floors, offices and stores are already rented. Inquire of Arthur C. Brady at the Renting Office in the Times Building, Times Square. Telephone Bryant 1451. ON BOARD THE DIRIGIBLE NORGE OF THE AMUNDSEN-ELLSWORTH-NOBILE EXPEDITION, April 15.—The dirigible Norge on its flight from Rome to Spitzbergen for its proposed trip across the North Pole to Alaska arrived at Leningrad at 8 o'clock tonight after a difficult passage. The weather was foggy and observation work impossible, lengthening the voyage and making it impossible to pass over Stockholm and Helsingfors.

When the fog cleared at 11 A. M. and we could get our bearings we discovered that we had been driven southward. Finally at 3:15 P. M., we were astonished to find we were over Valga on the frontier of Esthonia and Latvia. Then we laid a course northeast for Narva. We followed the railway lines as far as the airdrome outside Leningrad, crossing the Esthonian-Russian frontier at 5:10 P. M.

The engines functioned perfectly on the long trip. The speed was from sixty to ninety kilometers an hour and the height between 100 and 500 meters.

RIGA, Latvia, April 15.—The dirigible Norge of the Amundsen-Ellsworth-Nobile polar expedition landed safely at the Gatchina hangar, about thirty-five miles from Leningrad, at 7:30 o'clock tonight in the presence of crowds of peasants shouting "Hurrah." The Norge appeared above Gatchina at 5:30 o'clock Greenwich Time.

Soon after leaving Oslo, the Norge met a strong wind, and when seventy miles from Stockholm turned southward to avoid fog.

There was great excitement at Reval, Esthonia, this morning, because the people expected to see the airship; but messages from Stockholm received later stated that she was flying toward Finland. Three Esthonian airplanes, with journalists aboard, flew to Helsingfors; but the errand was fruitless. An Esthonian warship then picked up a wireless message from the Norge stating that she had changed her course.

About noon, Greenwich Time, the Norge was sighted near Pernau, Esthonia, flying at a height of about 900 feet. The name "Norge" and the figure "1" were plainly visible, and the motors were heard a long way off.

The Norge followed the railway to Valga, thence to Dorpat, where it appeared at 3:20 P. M., Greenwich Time. Several airplanes ascended at Yuriev and accompanied the Norge until near the Soviet frontier. The Reval radio station wished godspeed to the polar expedition and received the reply "Thanks."

The Norwegian, Italian and British Consuls and the Italian Naval Attaché and numerous prominent Russians, including the Academician, Dr. Oldenburg, waited at Gatchina from morning to welcome the Norge. The Italian Attaché, after inspecting the hangar, expressed satisfaction at the arrangements for the Norge's reception.

Apparently in connection with the Amundsen-Ellsworth-Nobile expedition, the Soviet Government today proclaimed as territory of the Soviet Republic all lands and islands which may be discovered, no matter of what nationality the discoverer may be, north of the Soviet coasts up to the North Pole.

Will Stay at Leningrad for Two Weeks.

The Norge will remain for two weeks at Leningrad, according to plans cabled from Oslo, because it cannot safely go to Spitzbergen until its hangar at King's Bay is completed.

That will take at least two weeks more. Arrangements have been made with the Soviet Government for the care of the ship at the landing field near Leningrad until the start for Spitzbergen.

Captain Roald Amundsen and Lincoln Ellsworth, who have not been on the dirigible at any time since its flight from Rome, are now on their way to Spitzbergen to take charge of plans there for receiving the Norge. The landing crew of Norwegians, detailed by the Norwegian Government to help in bringing the Norge into its hangar in Spitzbergen, leaves Oslo tomorrow for King's Bay.

The structure which is being built at Spitzbergen for the Norge is the largest wooden hangar in the world. It is 350 feet long, 100 feet wide and 160 feet high. Cable dispatches from King's Bay to THE NEW YORK TIMES

LONDON, April 15.—J. D. S. Inglis of Edinburgh was said today to have established a new record for motoring in Britain.

Driving an American six-cylinder car on a trip of 547 miles from London to Aberdeen yesterday, he traveled at the rate of 43 miles an hour, being beaten by only 41 minutes by the quickest regular express train.

News Comes 6,000 Miles by Indian Runner, Telephone, Telegraph, Wireless, Cable.

William C. Lyon, special correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES and the newspapers associated with it in obtaining news from the Amundsen-Ellsworth-Nobile polar airship expedition, the airplane polar expedition of Commander Robert E. Byrd and the motor sled-airplane expedition of the French under Lieutenant Georges Darcis, is on his way with a wireless outfit and an army wireless telegrapher to Point Barrow, Alaska, to pick up the messages comin from the expeditions by air. The latest stage of the trying journey of 1,200 miles through the snow bound wilderness is told in Mr. Lyon's dispatch, printed below.

An interesting feature in connection with the story is the manner in which it reached New York. Filed at Candle, Alaska, by Mr. Lyon, the first stage was from Candle to Kotzebau by Indian runner, then to Nulato by telephone, thence to Fairbanks by Morse wires, thence wirelessed to Seward, where it was put on the cable to Seattle, after which it was received in THE NEW YORK TIMES office over Western Union land wires direct. The distance traversed by the story was approximately 6,000 miles.

CANDLE, Alaska, Via SEATTLE, Wash., April 15.—For two weeks since we were last in communication with the outside world we have experienced every hardship, difficulty and obstacle to progress that can come to the Winter traveler in Alaska except the blizzard, and with some seven hundred miles ahead of us, leading almost due north and into the Arctic Circle, there is every reason to believe that we will not miss that single exception.

During these last two weeks we have literally been through "hell and high water," with a considerable portion of the latter to delay us.

We left Nulato, our last source of communication, at 5 o'clock on the morning of March 31. Our destination that day was Kaltag, which marked the end of the trail along the Yukon River.

As had been the case for several days before then, we encountered melting, slushy snow on the surface of the river. The trail continually broke through and we went through the labor to which we had become rather accustomed of tugging the big, heavy sleds through the snow back on to the trail.

At Kaltag we found it necessary to remain over a day because of the soft trail. The second day we started across the portage, headed for Unalakleet.

The snow was about three feet deep and had almost no crust on it, even at 5 o'clock in the morning, a time when it should be frozen if it ever was to be.

That day proved the hardest of all. We made only ten mile to a shelter cabin in the afternoon and there we stayed for the night.

On this day began my personal dif-

DANZIGER REVEALS MORE MILK GRAFT ON COURT'S WARNING

Pleads Guilty to Extortion and Is Freed on $10,000 Bail to Aid Investigators.

TELL ALL, SAYS JUSTICE

Prisoner's New Disclosures Said to Be About $1,000,000 Fund for Protection.

MONAGHAN AID DISMISSED

Board Finds Him Guilty of "Irregularities"—Two Health Officials on Trial Today.

A plea of guilty to a charge of extortion growing out of the bootleg milk investigation was entered in the Supreme Court in Bronx County yesterday by Harry Danziger of Middle Village, Queens, formerly general manager of the Metropolitan Milk Dealers' Association. He was released in $10,000 bail for sentence April 29.

Following a warning by Supreme Court Justice Aaron J. Levy that he would be dealt with harshly unless he told all he knew of the fund of $1,000,000 which it is alleged has been collected from milk dealers in return for allowing them to flood the city with adulterated milk, Danziger made additional disclosures yesterday afternoon to Assistant District Attorney Sylvester J. Ryan in the Bronx.

Charges that two former city officials, who occupied "important posts under the Hylan Administration, were the originators and chief beneficiaries of the widespread system of graft levied through Health Department agencies then, are being investigated as a result of Danziger's revelations it was said last night. It also was said that as soon as the evidence was in proper form it would be submitted to District Attorney Banton for action.

More Disclosures Expected.

Danziger was indicted by the Bronx County Grand Jury last Tuesday for extorting $7,000 from the Individual Milk Dealers' Association. When the case was called yesterday Justice Levy overruled a motion by Mr. Ryan to try Danziger in the Bronx County Court and said that he considered the milk situation of sufficient importance to require further investigation by the Grand Jury, and that he had received important information concerning corruption in connection with it which he intended to place before the Grand Jury next Tuesday. He declined to make its nature public at present. In addition, Justice Levy said that his communication to the Grand Jury would contain instructions in relation to the situation.

Entering a plan of guilty for Danziger, Samuel Goldstone his counsel, told the Court that Danziger was a "mere fool" in the hands of high officials in the Health Department and asked that he be released on bail of $10,000. Mr. Ryan said that he and District Attorney R. S. Newcombe of Queens would need Danziger to complete their investigations, and that he would agree to the bail on condition that the Court admonish him to tell all he knew of corruption formerly existing in the Health Department, and that he would agree to give all possible assistance in clearing up the milk situation. In permitting bail, Justice Levy, addressing the prisoner, said:

"This is the most serious situation that has ever occurred in this county and city, but the pollution of milk and the destruction of child life were ever more grave than the present charge of extortion against you, which is a very heinous crime in itself. There must be no secrets. The cards must be laid on the table.

"I admonish you that unless you materially aid the prosecution in the unearthing of all the contemptible acts of men in public life, very little mercy will be manifested to you. You must tell everything you know, regardless of who they are. The more important their public place, the more positive and swift the punishment should be."

Health Employe Dismissed.

Although it had been expected that Danziger would be present at Health Commissioner Louis L Harris's office yesterday afternoon, when he was to give testimony at the trial of Henry

New Regulations Limit Inspection of Tax Return

WASHINGTON, April 15 (AP).—Only the income tax payer and his attorney may inspect his individual income return under new rules governing publicity of returns authorized by President Coolidge and made public today by Secretary Mellon.

They provide that an officer of a corporation may inspect his corporation tax return, and a State officer may inspect a corporation tax return. In case of the death of the taxpayer his next of kin or executor may inspect the return. Government officers may inspect the returns at the discretion of Secretary Mellon.

3,000 IN TUG STRIKE; MAY TIE UP HARBOR

MAILS DUE TO LEAVE TODAY

Workers Say Owners Spurned Pay Rise Demand—Employers Call Special Meeting.

A general strike of towboat workers was called last evening by the Associated Marine Workers, and reports were received at headquarters, 120 Broad Street, after the strike order had been issued, that the men were leaving as soon as their vessels were tied up. The strike will affect about 3,000 men employed on about 400 towboats. The men demand a ten-hour day and an advance in pay. The action was taken by the Associated Marine Workers, it was said, because they had received no reply from towboat owners to a letter declaring that a change in existing schedules would be demanded on April 1.

Captain William A. Maher, general manager of the workers' organization said he expected that the strike would tie up New York shipping. It will probably have an effect upon the docking of transatlantic liners. The French liners Bourdonnais and Savoie are due today and both require the services of half a dozen towboats to be brought alongside their North River piers. The Cunarder Berengaria, the Italian liner Conte Rosso and the United States liner Columbus are due on Saturday. The Berengaria is usually assisted to her pier by nine tugs.

Liners Due to Sail Today.

Ships scheduled to sail with mail today are the Columbia of the Cosulich Line for Greece, the Munson liner Munargo for the Bahamas, the Flore of the Royal Belgian Line for the West Indies, the Santa Rosalia of the Norton Lilly Company for Buenos Aires and the Maraval of the Trinidad Line for Georgetown, West Indies. The Olympic of the White Star Line will sail at midnight for Southampton, followed a few minutes later by the Pennland of the Red Star Line for Antwerp.

The men on twelve tugs of the Dalzell Towing Company went on strike on Tuesday as a test move that was expected to bring about the opening of negotiations. Among the crews reporting to the union as striking were those of the Munson Line, the Grace Line and the Moran Towing Company. The Towboat Exchange, which represents the boat owners, met yesterday, but it was said the impending strike was not considered.

The Associated Marine Workers, according to Captain Maher, are asking for the following changes in wages:

Unlicensed workers, consisting of cooks, deck hands and oilers, now receiving $75 to $110 a month, ask from $100 to $120.

Engineers, now receiving from $140 to $215 a month, ask $190 to $250.

Assistant engineers, now receiving $175 to $200 a month, ask a flat rate of $230.

Captains and pilots, receiving now $150 to $250 a month, ask for $200 to $260.

Mates, on double-crew boats, receiving $175 to $200, now ask $230 flat a month.

Also Want Better Hours.

The marine workers contend they are discriminated against in the matter of long hours and insufficient overtime. They ask for a ten-hour day with one and one-half for overtime, instead of a working week of sixty to seventy hours and then overtime at one and one-half.

Captain Maher said that there were about 800 tugs in this harbor and that about half of that number were affected. The other half are mostly railroad and Government tugs. The average crew of the tugs is seven men.

It was reported last night that a meeting of the towboat owners had been hastily called for noon today when the matter of the strike would be taken up. It is regarded possible that if the owners meet the workers half way they will go back to work pending negotiations.

Charles A. Mason, Secretary of the Towboat Exchange, said:

"All I have heard is that the Dalzell tugs are out. They have on board a very small percentage of the total

HACKENSACK, N. J., April 15.—Developments today in the strike of textile workers in Passaic, Garfield, Clifton and Lodi were as follows:

Appeal by the strikers to Governor A. Harry Moore to intervene and recall Sheriff Nimmo from Garfield, where he rushed a large force of deputy sheriffs on the sole request of Mayor William Burke, an employe of the Botany Worsted Mills, whose act was repudiated by members of the Garfield City Council.

Preparation of an opinion on the Governor's power to act by Attorney General Katzenbach. The Governor will study the opinion today.

Support of the appeal for Gubernatorial intervention by the American Civil Liberties Union, through Arthur Garfield Hays, who sent a protest to Governor Moore bristling with a recital of acts by the police and county officers alleged to be illegal and "a mockery of justice."

The release of Norman Thomas, New York Socialist leader, and Robert Dunn, director of the American Civil Liberties Union, on $10,000 bail each. Thomas was arrested on Wednesday when he sought to test the Riot act. Dunn was seized as he moved away from a picket line Monday in response to an order to disperse on the reading of the Riot act.

Attempt by a commitee of strikers children to picket the White House (favor of the strikers was stopped by the Washington police, who held that a parade of minors was in violation of the Child Labor laws. The spokesmen for the strikers left a batch of affidavits with the President's secretary alleging violation of constitutional rights and brutality of police officers.

Decision of Supreme Court Justice Black in Jersey City to permit the release for a hearing on Saturday of Albert Weisbord, head of the United Front Committee, conducting the strike, on a writ of habeas corpus alleging illegal detention in the county jail at Paterson.

Missed Another Night in Jail.

Mr. Thomas was released in $10,000 bail today by Justice of the Peace Louis Hargreaves after an effort was made to send him back to the Bergen County jail for another night on a technicality.

Bail was furnished by a surety company prior to Mr. Thomas's arraignment. When he was held to await the action of the Grand Jury, Mr. Thomas started to leave the office of Justice of the Peace Hargreaves under the impression that he was free on bail. Deputy Sheriff Thomas accompanied him to the County jail, and it was explained that the first $10,000 did not cover the arraignment.

For a time it appeared that the authorities would insist that he furnish an additional $10,000, although he was held on a single charge. It was 3:50 o'clock and Mr. Thomas had only ten minutes to make the additional bail arrangement. The presence of Mrs. Thomas, who rose from a sickbed to call on her husband, apparently softened the Sheriff's representative and the first $10,000 was transferred to cover the bail fixed after the arraignment.

Strikers Hold Mass Meeting.

In the mean time the textile strikers held a mass meeting at Wallington, in Bergen County, just across the line from Garfield and Passaic, and 1,500 listened to Elizabeth Gurley Flynn and other speakers exhort them to stand firm. There was no disorder. One policeman was in sight and he was busy directing traffic.

Sheriff Nimmo's threat to arrest anybody who tried to hold a meeting in Bergen County failed to materialize. The failure of Sheriff Morgan of Passaic County to leave Paterson and appear with his 150 armed deputies in Passaic, despite the announcement that he would read the Riot act in his jurisdiction, caused considerable discussion. This, together with the failure of the Grand Jury to indict Weisbord and the granting of a writ of habeas corpus for his appearance before Supreme Court Justice Black in

Kentucky Drys Demand Ousting of Andrews; He Explains He Is Not Urging Change of Law

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 15 (AP).—The Anti-Saloon League of Kentucky will demand that the President remove Lincoln Andrew, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of prohibition enforcement, Dr. A. C. Graham, Superintendent of the State League, notified national league officers today.

General Andrews's agreement that non-intoxicating beer be put on the market was given as the reason for the action. Dr. Graham said he had received many letters, telegrams and telephone messages from out in the State, demanding that the Kentucky league act at once in seeking the removal of General Andrews.

Dr. Graham's telegram, sent to Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel, and F. Scott McBride, national superintendent, said:

"Kentucky drys will demand President remove Andrews. Wire your reaction."

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Answering those who demanded interpretation of his testimony yesterday before the Senate subcommittee, General Andrews issued this statement today:

"The hypothetical question put to me yesterday was: 'If non-intoxicating cereal beverages or beer could be distributed under Government supervision for home consumption, and in bona-fide hotels to be taken with meals, would this probably aid law enforcement?' I answered: 'Yes.'

"I am not advocating any change in this law. On the contrary, we have recently perfected plans and are seeking additional authority and funds from Congress to put them into effect which we confidently believe will enable us to wipe out the beer traffic this season.

"It is my task to enforce the law as written, and to that end I am giving my sole attention."

JEWELS VALUED AT $40,000

Police Seek a Window Cleaner Who Came to Apartment on Wednesday, Then Vanished.

Two strands of pearls and two brooches, one of diamonds and the other of Oriental pearls and diamonds, disappeared Wednesday afternoon from the apartment at 71 Park Avenue of Miss Muriel H. Wurts-Dundas, an heiress widely known in society of New York and Philadelphia. The gems, heirlooms from a grandmother of Miss Wurts-Dundas, are valued at about $40,000. The police were notified about 4 o'clock Wednesday of the loss and announced it yesterday. They said they had only a "fair" description of a window washer who was believed to have rifled the dressing table in which they were kept. Several other pieces of jewelry were overlooked by the thief.

About noon on Wednesday a man described as tall and slender, about 40 years old and apparently of foreign birth, entered the apartment with a pail and a cloth. He set about cleaning the windows. Miss Wurts-Dundas who lives with her maid and her cook and has as her guest for the Winter Miss Elizabeth Green of Georgia, was present at the time, but left shortly afterward. She returned to her apartment later in the afternoon and discovered her loss when she went to the dressing table in her bedroom.

Departed in an Hour.

It then developed that the cleaner had departed without completing his work in the apartment and that he had left his pail behind. He had spent only an hour there and, the police believe, left through the kitchen and possibly down the service elevator at the rear of the building. Inquiry at the Excel Window Cleaning Company, at 73 Third Avenue, which sent the workman, revealed that he had been employed there only one week, having been hired through an advertisement. He had said he was Nick Swanson, of 265 East Twenty-fourth Street. The police found that there was no such address and they believe the name also was fictitious.

Inspector John D. Coughlin assigned several detectives from Headquarters to assist Sergeant Patrick Kenney and Detectives Gorman and Duggan of the East Thirty-fifth Street station on the

14 SWITCH IN ASSEMBLY

Members Who Voted for Enforcement Tell McGinnies They Favor Karle-Phelps Bill.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 15.—Republican leaders in several other States, it was learned today, are bringing pressure to bear on lawmakers of their party at the Capitol with a view to insuring favorable action by the Assembly on the Karle-Phelps prohibition referendum, already passed by the Senate.

The information came from a high Republican source. That the referendum bill in the form it has now assumed is fraught with more than State importance was indicated by some of the promoters of the measure even before they approached Elihu Root for assistance in drafting it.

The defeat of United States Senator William B. McKinley, a large contributor to the Anti-Saloon League, in the Republican primaries in Illinois and the hard fight confronting Senator George Wharton Pepper of Pennsylvania, who is being opposed for the Senate nomination by Representative William S. Vare, a pronounced wet, has focused the attention of national leaders on the awkward position in which the Republican Party finds itself in a number of States, including the two already mentioned, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Connecticut and some others.

With the Democrats united on the prohibition issue in all of these politically important Commonwealths, the Republicans are looking to the leaders of their party in this State to blaze a trail that may afford them an avenue of escape from their present dilemma.

National Attention Aroused.

When it was first presented to the Legislature as a referendum on light wines and beer, the Karle-Phelps bill was viewed at the Capitol as nothing more than a gesture on the part of two legislators anxious to please wet Republican constituencies and few saw any hope for it. Now the fight over the bill, as amended by Mr. Root, has taken on a national aspect and many Republicans of prominence in the national organization are said to be of the opinion that the referendum in its present form would be adopted in other States with Republican Legislatures if New York led the way.

The first reaction to this pressure from abroad was apparent here today when fourteen Republican members of the Assembly, all of whom—with the exception of one who was absent—had voted earlier in the week for the Wales-Jenks dry enforcement bills, called on Speaker McGinnies and informed him that they would like to support the referendum bill, but would not do so if he urged them not to. The Speaker told them, in effect, that the party had taken no stand for or against the measure and that they could follow their own inclinations without fear of being charged with party irregularity or being retaliated against.

Willis S. Sargent of Onondaga is credited with assuming leadership in the movement which resulted in the delegation going to the Speaker. Included in the delegation were F. Trubee Davison of Nassau, Walter S. Godsey of Rockland, Charles A. Freiberg of Erie, William M. Nicoll of

MRS. NORTON BACKS WETS

Woman Representative Calls Volstead Act Failure—Drys to Testify Today.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Opponents of the present Prohibition law, who for the last eleven days have sought to convince the Senate Committee on Judiciary that the Volstead Dry Enforcement act, in addition to being unenforceable, had become so objectionable to millions of citizens that the time has come to amend it so as to permit light wines and beers, closed their case at 12:15 o'clock this afternoon.

Tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock the drys will begin their battle to disprove the assertions of the wets. They announced tonight that their first day's witnesses will include Professor Irving Fisher of Yale University, Professor Haven Emerson of Columbia University, Colonel P. H. Callahan of Louisville, Ky.; E. W. Keating, editor of Labor, and Lee Neatty, Superintendent of the Madison Square Settlement, New York City.

Ending their case today the wets called as their final star witness Dr. Samuel Harden Church, President of Carnegie Institute of Pittsburgh. Several Representatives in Congress also were heard today, and others filed statements.

The wets also recalled General Lincoln C. Andrews, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of prohibition enforcement, to the witness chair for a brief examination by Senator Reed, as well as Dr. M. Doren, chemist of the prohibition unit; Gerald Murphy of the District of Columbia Enforcement Bureau, and John J. Callan of the Liberty Defense League of Baltimore.

Enforcement Methods Described.

General Andrews today was spared answering any questions as to the advisability or inadvisability of restoring beer of at least 2.75 per cent. alcoholic content to good standing in the country. Instead, he was questioned as to the methods used by his subordinates in gathering evidence against the illicit liquor dealers and purveyors.

General Andrews said that criminals may have been made use of in getting information, but, if so, he had no knowledge of it. He denied indignantly that he had ever, as it was charged the Anti-Saloon League had done, sought to persuade "neighbor to spy on neighbor."

Senator Reed had called General Andrews's attention to an article printed in a Cincinnati newspaper which alleged that Thomas B. Jarvis, head of the Anti-Saloon League for the Cincinnati district, in an address to the Women's Christian Temperance Union, had urged the women to go out among their friends and find if any among them were violating the law, and said further, it was asserted, that the "nosier" the women were the better would be the results.

"You know, Senator," said General Andrews, "I would not do such a thing as that."

"I know you wouldn't, you are an officer and a gentleman," replied Senator Reed.

Church Bitter Against Dry Law.

President Church of the Carnegie Institute was one of the last witnesses. Since the hearings began not even Senator Bruce of Maryland has handled the prohibition situation in a more scathing fashion than did Mr. Church.

After asserting that he was a Presbyterian, Mr. Church declared that some of the Protestant churches of the United States are aiming by backdoor methods to effect a union of Church and State by using prohibition as the entering wedge.

"What I am trying to call to the attention of the committee, and I am a Protestant and a churchman," said Mr. Church, "is the fact that some of the Protestant churches of our land, either by banding together or by working independently but reciprocally and all of them using prohibition as an entering wedge, are aiming by those indirect methods to effect a union of Church and State through the back door, when the Constitution of the United States prohibits them from accomplishing that purpose through the front door.

Boy, 13, Trails Thief Suspect and Aids Arrest; Absent From School but the Police Explain It

Meyer Weitzman, thirteen-year-old pupil in Grade 7B at Public School 16, Wilson Street, near Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, was absent without leave yesterday. But when he goes to school this morning he will carry with him a letter from Detective Hemindinger of the Clymer Street Police Station informing the Principal that Myer's absence was due to his helping the police arrest a man who it is believed had just stolen clothing and jewelry worth $5,000 from the home of Abraham Stein at 157 Clymer Street, next door to Meyer's home.

Detective Hemindinger made the arrest, but he said that had it not been for Meyer's smart work in trailing the suspect from Brooklyn to Manhattan and then telephoning for the police the burglar probably never would have been caught.

Meyer was on his way to school when he saw a young man coming from the Stein house. The man carried a bundle, and Meyer knew the Steins were away from home, so he suspected that something was wrong.

He followed the young man to a trolley car, across the bridge to Manhattan and then trailed him to a house near Clinton Street. When he saw the man enter the house Meyer ran to a telephone and called up the police station nearest his home, the Clymer Street station.

Detective Hemindinger came to Manhattan, met Meyer and learned about the young man with the bundle. In a house at 240 Clinton Street the detective arrested Isidore Levine, 18 years old, who, it is alleged, was the young man whom Meyer had followed.

Levine was arraigned in the Bridge Plaza Police Court before Magistrate Haubert and held for examination today. It was then too late to go to school, so Meyer went home and told his parents.

Coolidge Breaks Attack of Grip in Five Hours; Owl Perches on the Post of His Bed at Night

WASHINGTON, April 15.—President Coolidge believes in preparedness and therefore today he canceled his engagements and took precautions against a threatened attack of grip. At 11 o'clock this morning, feeling rather groggy, he left his office and went to the White House without consulting his physician.

There he had a mustard foot bath and a hot lemonade and went to bed. He refrained from food at the lunch hour and at 4:15 o'clock this afternoon was in good enough form to return to his desk.

He walked about the outer rooms and explained to the callers that he did not have an attack of indigestion, as had been reported, but the beginnings of a cold, which he thought he had broken up.

Mr. Coolidge's bedroom was invaded about 11 o'clock last night. The President discovered the visitor and kept still while it went from place to place and then disappeared without taking any valuables. It came in the south window facing Potomac Park and perched on the bed post.

The President today told the story to newspaper men and maintained the mystery until the last. Then he explained that the night prowler was an owl, one of the five which make their home in the White House grounds.

"Did it wake you up with its hoots?" the President was asked.

"No," he replied. "It was not a noisy owl and came up quietly and went away silently."

RADICALS DISRUPT FUR PEACE MEETING

COMMUNIST LEADER BARRED

42-HOUR WEEK ASSURED

A meeting of 4,000 striking fur workers in Carnegie Hall, called by the International Fur Workers Union to hear terms of a strike settlement proposed by the American Federation of Labor, broke up yesterday afternoon after an hour and fifteen minutes of wild demonstration by the "left wing," or Communist element of the strikers.

Incensed because Benjamin Gold, head of the Joint Board of the local Furriers Union, had been barred from the hall by orders of the International officials, the radicals booed, hissed, whistled and shouted incessantly for their leader, and refused to listen to Federation of Labor officials who sat on the platform. While those inside the hall were howling their discontent, more than 5,000 others milled outside the building in a vain attempt to get through the doors.

Terms of the Settlement.

The break-up of the meeting came as American Federation of Labor officials were prepared to announce a settlement termed by Hugh Frayne, national organizer of the Federation, "the best ever offered in the history of the fur industry." The terms of settlement included a 42-hour week, a ten per cent. increase in the minimum wage rate, and other demands of the workers. Mr. Frayne said that the Federation, acting through the International Fur Workers Union, would poll the workers on the advisability of conferring with the manufacturers and reaching an agreement. At the same time Gold, the leader of the left wing, announced that his forces would disregard any such efforts on the part of the International, and that if an attempt were made to go over the heads of the local union an appeal would be made to the American Federation of Labor officials.

The excitement at Carnegie Hall began shortly after 2 o'clock, when the crowds of strikers were pouring through the Fifty-seventh Street entrances into the auditorium. It was soon apparent that thousands would not to be able to get in, and police reserves were sent under Inspector Michael Lyons. By ploughing into the crowds in double lines and by mounted charges, the police slowly cleared the streets around the building, and the long lines of strikers were sent streaming east to Sixth Avenue on Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Streets.

One of those who tried to enter the hall was Gold. He was turned away at the entrance by two policemen and an official of the International Fur Workers Union, who, explained that orders had been issued to keep him from the meeting. The reason given was that Gold had failed to answer charges regarding the alleged slugging of Hyman Sorkin, a Vice President of the International, by members of the local Strike Committee.

Jeers and Hisses Start.

Word that Gold had been barred soon reached the auditorium, crowded from orchestra pit to the highest galleries with restless fur workers. Jeers and hisses soon broke out, directed at four men who sat on the stage. They were Mr. Frayne, John Coughlin, Secretary of the New York State Federation of Labor; Oscar Scachtman, head of the International Fur Workers' Union, and Morris Zeitlin, Acting President of the Joint Board.

When Mr. Frayne arose to call the meeting to order he was greeted by shouts and imprecations. Soon the hall was ringing with what sounded like a college football yell—"Gold! Gold! We Want Gold!" This continued for more than a half hour, while Mr. Frayne and the others on the stage sat powerless to make themselves heard.

It was perhaps the wildest noise-making Carnegie Hall has heard since the Sinn Fein disturbance of 1920 and 1921, but there was no violence. Police stood by dozens in various parts of the auditorium and in the outer corridors. Whenever a shouter became too insistent he was quietly ejected, but the total number sent out of the hall was small. Strikers, popping up from orchestra seats, yelled to the balconies, adding to the din, while those in the galleries chorused back.

At 3 o'clock, after the demonstration had been in progress for almost an hour, there was a consultation by those on the stage. At this the booing redoubled, until it could be heard by the crowds on Fifty-seventh Street. Mr. Coughlin rose for a moment for a drink of water. He, too, became the object of the crowd's derision, and the cries for Gold echoed through the hall. It was plain that the most insistent part of the crowd was having its way, and preventing the meeting from proceeding.

Police Official Intervenes.

At 3:20 a tall man in a light overcoat strode onto the stage and held up his hand for silence. The shouts and cries showed no sign of abating until he pointed to a gold shield on his lapel. The tumult quickly subsided, and the speaker said:

"If you will all be quiet, I have an announcement to make. I am Inspector Lyons of the Police Department, and I am in charge of the policemen who are here today. The committee has decided not to hold this meeting. In the name of the Police Department I ask you to leave quietly and peaceably. The police will assist the crowd in leaving the hall."

With that the strikers crowded excitedly into the aisles and out to the street. They then moved down the side streets, some forming into small parades bound for Gold's office and the headquarters of the Joint Board, at 22 East Twenty-second Street.

Mr. Frayne and the other leaders present were indignant at the failure of the meeting. "I'm sure we can stand it if they can," he said. "These people more than any others are constantly demanding the right to free speech, but they think it applies only to themselves.

"We could have held this meeting, but I felt if I agreed to go on—and I assume whatever responsibility or criticism or odium goes with the decision—that the police would club their way through the building and fill the hospitals of New York with this afternoon's disturbers. And while I disapprove of this crowd's conduct this afternoon, I prefer that what happened did happen. A minority broke up the meeting, but it did not break up the labor movement and did not stop those who strive to get better conditions for those who are deserving of them. The Federation is still squarely behind the International Union of Fur Workers.

"This meeting was called by President Schachtman and the International officers at my request, and with the understanding of the American Federation of Labor. We wanted this afternoon to tell these people that if they would vote the authority to the International officers to go into conference with the manufacturers, I could assure them a settlement which would give them a very substantial improvement and conditions better than any which ever existed in the industry."

Got Manufacturers' Assent.

Here Mr. Frayne read the terms of the proposed settlement, to which he said he had already obtained the manufacturers' assent. They were as follows:

1. The old agreement to be used as a basis for conference.
2. Overtime to be eliminated as far as possible, the exact extent to be determined by discussion.
3. The agreement to last for three years.
4. For two years from Feb. 1, 1926, no apprentices to be admitted into the industry until it has absorbed those already in service.
5. No subcontracting.
6. The present minimum wage to be increased 10 per cent.
7. At the end of two years the second-class minimum to be abolished.
8. A forty-two-hour week, to be distributed during the first five days of the week, to make a five-day week for seven months in the year; for the other five months the forty-two hours to be spread over a six-day week, with not more than four hours of work on Saturday.

Mr. Schachtman, head of the International, said that a ballot had already been sent out to all the fur workers asking their assent to these terms as a basis for a conference with the manufacturers. "More than 2,500 returns are in our hands already," he said. "When we have them all in we will have an impartial committee count them, and if we find a majority favorable we will take steps to bring about a conference. And if the Joint Board still refuses to go back to work after an agreement is reached and approved, they will be outlawed."

Gold to Ignore Action.

At his headquarters yesterday Mr. Gold said his followers would ignore such action on the part of the International. As he spoke hundreds of strikers, who had marched downtown from Carnegie Hall were parading in front of the building, waving their hats and calling for him to come to a window. The strike leader, a youthful figure with long, stringy blond hair, cheerfully admitted that he was a Communist. He denied that instructions had been given to his followers to break up the Carnegie Hall meeting.

"On the contrary, they were asked to go to the meeting," Gold said. "They don't need any orders in time of strike. They know when to demonstrate to show their solidarity."

The strike leader added that he had never received a copy of charges by the International officers, accusing his followers with the slugging attack on Sorkin. He also denied a statement made by Schachtman, head of the International, that sluggers and gangsters were brought into Carnegie Hall and given trade union cards for the afternoon. "There are no sluggers in the union any more," he said. "There used to be, under the old régime, but we have had nothing to do with them.

"The International can go ahead and make a settlement, but no settlement will be approved unless it is approved by the strikers themselves. No international official has the authority to approve any settlement without the consent of the strikers. This meeting today should have been enough to convince them that they cannot confer with the employers in the strikers' name.

"If they do try to impose their schemes on our membership, we will appeal to the A. F. of L. On the other hand, the Strike Committee is determined that this strike will be conducted to the end."

Gold said that mass meetings of his followers would be held at noon today and that Mr. Frayne and Mr. Coughlin had been invited to be present.

THREATEN THE FORWARD.

Strikers Stage a Demonstration Against Jewish Newspaper.

Five thousand striking furriers who were among those in the disturbance at Carnegie Hall engaged in another demonstration shortly after 6 o'clock yesterday on East Broadway against the Jewish Daily Forward, a newspaper which has expressed disapproval of the strikers' leadership. Police reserves were called from two stations to disperse the crowd, and one small boy was hurt.

The strikers gathered in Seward Park, opposite the newspaper's building at 173 East Broadway, after marching downtown from Carnegie Hall. There, shouting their antagonism to The Forward, the strikers lighted copies of the newspaper and started marching past the newspaper building.

The streets in the vicinity were jammed and traffic was held up. Police scattered the strikers into all the streets near the park and into the park.

Joseph Dotskill, 6 years old, of 15 Essex Street, who was standing on the curb near the newspaper building, was thrown to the ground by the moving crowd and received lacerations of the forehead. He was treated by an ambulance surgeon from Gouverneur Hospital and sent home.

No one was arrested.

TOWBOAT MEN STRIKE MAY TIE UP HARBOR

Mr. Mason said that the purpose of the meeting yesterday at the Maritime Exchange in Broad Street was to consider what part the New York towboat owners would take in the meeting in Newark on May 7 to protest against the action of the War Department in closing drawbridges across New Jersey waterways at certain hours.

The Associated Marine Workers is a New York organization, and is not a member of the American Federation of Labor. There are in the New York water front benefit organizations five separate groups, and just what part these groups will have in bringing about order as a result of the harbor strike will determine the leadership in a field not closely organized. The labor associations are the Engineers' Beneficial Association, the National Association of Masters, Mates and Pilots, which has a New York and a Newark local; the International Steam and Operating Engineers, and the Associated Marine Workers.

RUSSIA LOOKS HERE FOR CAPITAL SOURCE

Joffe, of Concessions Board, Says America Alone Has Cash, Energy and Skill.

CALLS SAFEGUARDS AMPLE

He Says Our Failure to Recognize the Soviet "Matters but Little" to the Concessionaire.

MOSCOW, April 15 (AP).—The United States, with its ready liquid capital and colossal energy, is the only nation capable of tapping the immense untouched wealth of Russia, in the opinion of Adolph Joffe, Chief of the Soviet Government Concessions Commission.

M. Joffe, in an interview with a correspondent for The Associated Press, turned from his work of applying Lenin's concession policy to every day practice to tell how the original concessions idea looks in the light of five years' experience, its detriments and its prospects.

Affirming definite progress, especially of late, when foreign offers have begun to lose solely speculative aspects and have assumed more solid proportions, M. Joffe is still dissatisfied with what he terms the first faint outlines of the work.

He believes that only the United States is in a position to touch the wealth that is available in Russia. The Harriman concession, as an example, M. Joffe said, would pay off the entire investment during the first three years of its operation.

M. Joffe discussed such points as security guarantees, preferred nation's clauses and how they affect American concessionaries while the Soviet is unrecognized by the Department of State, and finally what are the possibilities in event of war.

For "Strict Reciprocity" in War.

In the latter contingency, M. Joffe declared, Soviet Russia would govern itself by international law, steering for strict reciprocity.

While adhering to such fundamentals as the right of eminent domain, nationalization with adequate compensations, strict regard for the concessionaires' property rights and interests, Soviet Russia, he said, would still feel justified in following a course similar to that adopted by the warring country.

"Such a reciprocity policy was followed almost universally by the Allies in the last war," he said, "but we don't frame our concession plans with a view toward war. We want peace and economic cooperation, therefore such fears are needless.

"The difference between Europe and America is that Europe must first sell us ready merchandise, make profits and then invest in concessions, while America has liquid cash augmented by colossal energy and technical skill. The European offers are acceptable but the American orders are preferred."

Safeguarding of Concessions.

Asked what legal safeguards American concessionaires can expect, while the Soviet Government is still unrecognized by the United States, M. Joffe replied:

"To the concessionaire who already has secured a concession, recognition matters but little. Psychologically, he may feel more at ease, but, from every practical viewpoint, he is no less safe than the concessionaire of a country diplomatically related to Soviet Russia. Each concession charter is a special law, securing the concessionaire all rights and privileges and fixing his obligations. The preferred nation's clause affects foreigners only before the concession is granted and not after."

Taking up the question of profits, M. Joffe said: "There is scarcely a more profitable business than a concession in Soviet Russia. We don't limit profits. We tax excess and are therefore vitally interested in the concessionaire's success.

Range of Concessions to Be Made.

"The Concession Commission presently plans to grant concessions in the metal industry, electrical appliances, mining, fuel, chemicals, lumber, cement, etc.

"In South Russia we plan to concede metallurgic and ferro-manganese plants, besides metallurgic plants in the Urals.

"In Siberia we aim to concede metallurgic works, plants for manufacturing all kinds of machinery and instruments, heavy and light, such as railway cars, automobiles, dental instruments, ploughs, typewriters and locomotive repair plants.

"The capital required for these concessions ranges from 3,000,000 to 145,000,000 rubles. We plan to concede electrical plants at Charkov and in the Urals."

Touching the rights of the former owners to property forming the subject of a given concession, M. Joffe declared that a condition precedent to a former owner obtaining a concession must be his renunciation of any claims against the Soviet Government.

Police Widows Invite Walker.

Mayor Walker and Police Commissioner McLaughlin were among those invited yesterday to attend the first annual dinner and dance of the Association of Widows of Police Officers killed in service, to be held at the Hotel Astor, May 5. Mrs. Louise Motz is the President.

BROWNING GUARDED AS HE GETS THREATS

Six Detectives Watch Over Him After Telephone Calls—Court Case Dismissed.

HE BUYS $5,000 RINGS

Six private detectives were guarding Edward W. Browning last night when he and his 18-year-old bride motored from this city to the Gramatan Hotel, Bronxville. The protecting cordon was established after the real estate broker received several threatening telephone calls in the afternoon.

The nature of the threats could not be ascertained; but Browning, who has been more or less ill at ease since his sudden marriage to Frances Heenan became public last Saturday, appeared to be more nervous and agitated than ever.

In connection with the advent of the detectives it was learned that the janitor of Browning's office building at 153 West Seventy-second Street, when he arrived to clean up the broker's office at 5 A. M., found a long knot of crepe hanging from Browning's door knob. At the threshold were several old shoes and a bouquet of flowers. The janitor informed Browning of the decorations.

The broker and his bride were freed of some worry yesterday when Presiding Judge Franklin Chase Hoyt of the Children's Society dismissed the action of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, which had sought to displace Mrs. Catherine Heenan, the mother of the girl, as Frances's guardian. Judge Hoyt found that her marriage to Browning automatically ended the guardianship. None of the principals was in court.

Judge Hoyt noted that at the first hearing on the guardianship petition, representations were made that Mrs. Browning was too ill to appear. A certificate by Dr. Howard Fox was submitted on her physical condition. Judge Hoyt said that he was convinced that both the attorney (for Mrs. Heenan) and the physician "acted in the utmost good faith in making the statements which they did at that hearing." He emphasized the need for a law such as is now pending in the Assembly to prevent the marriage of minors, except in cases where the approval of a Justice of the Supreme Court or a Judge of the Children's Court was obtained, in addition to the parents' consent.

Browning and his wife motored early to this city from Bronxville. He went directly to his office and worked all day. She shopped, buying several new frocks and a mink coat at Fifth Avenue shops.

It developed last night at the Gramatan that Browning had found time yesterday to shop himself. He bought three rings for his bride. The first was the engagement ring, a platinum solitaire of 4½ carats. Next came the wedding band, also of platinum, circled with diamonds, and the third ring was a birthday one—Frances's natal day is June 16—which was a lovers knot in platinum with two large diamonds. The rings cost about $5,000.

On the way back to the Gramatan Hotel Browning and his wife stopped at a toy shop in Amsterdam Avenue near 100th Street. They purchased several games and then drove over to the private school at 104th Street and Riverside Drive where Dorothy Sunshine Browning, the child adopted several years ago by Browning, is a pupil. Dorothy, now 9 years old, met her new "mother" for the first time.

OFFERS TACNA-ARICA PLAN.

Kellogg Submits New Proposal to Envoys for Mediation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Secretary Kellogg submitted today a new proposal to the representatives of Chile and Peru in an effort to settle the Tacna-Arica controversy by mediation.

The Chilean and Peruvian Ambassadors will communicate this latest proposal to their Governments before the conversations are resumed. Another meeting will then be held.

The State Department office would not divulge the nature of the proposal. Secretary Kellogg submitted it to the Ambassadors during a conference this afternoon and after he had discussed the subject earlier in the day with former Secretary Hughes, who came to Washington for that purpose, leaving the city this evening. Secretary Kellogg also consulted General Pershing.

SANTIAGO, Chile, April 15 (AP).—An official communique says that Ambassador William M. Collier has made representations to the Chilean Foreign Minister against the injustice of attacks by newspapers here against the United States with reference to the Tacna-Arica question.

The Ambassador added that it was due to repeated suggestions of the Chilean member of the plebiscitary commission, Augustin Edwards, to General Pershing, then neutral Chairman of the commission, that the formula for the neutralization of Tacna-Arica was mentioned. Mr. Collier asked that the press be informed of the situation.

The Foreign Minister replied, regretting the publication and the injustice of the attacks against the United States. The Minister's note ended by thanking the Government of the United States for the "disinterested and noble spirit it had shown in facilitating an agreement between Chile and Peru."

TAX LIMIT EXPIRES WITH RUSH AT END

15,000 File State Returns in Manhattan and 50,000 in Brooklyn Up to Midnight.

STAFF IS HARD PRESSED

Increase in Exemptions and Cut of 25 Per Cent. Make Heavy Inroads Into Receipts.

Close to 15,000 persons filed their State income tax returns up to midnight last night in the office of the New York State Tax Commission at 230 West Fortieth Street.

The last minute rush was heavy, but the staff under Director James J. Donovan handled the problem smoothly. All were thoroughly tired when quitting time came, however, and not a little of the fatigue was owing to the numberless telephone calls during the day for information.

In Brooklyn more than 50,000 persons paid tax at the office of the State Tax Department, 40 Myrtle Avenue, yesterday. Henry B. Cocheu said that within the last two weeks about 200,000 persons visited the office and paid their taxes. Yesterday more than 25,000 pieces of mail, carrying returns and checks were received. The largest individual payment was one of $30,000, Mr. Cocheu said, and the smallest was a tax of ten cents.

Officials said that the comparatively small number of returns recorded in the city was due to the fact that most persons sent their returns to Albany.

Last year the city yielded $32,000,000 in income tax payments, which represented about 70 per cent. of the total obtained throughout the State. This year, officials said, the sum obtained was expected to be smaller, owing to the increase in exemptions and the 25 per cent. cut allowed by the Legislature.

As fast as the returns were received at the Fortieth Street office they were opened and the payments deposited. The tax forms were arranged in bundles and shipped by express to the commission's headquarters at 42 North Pearl Street, Albany, where the work of auditing and classifying the returns will be done.

For the benefit of the tardy ones who failed to get their tax in on time, Director Donovan cited the penalty provisions of the law. The clause reads as follows:

"If any taxpayer without intent to evade any tax imposed under the law shall fail to make a return of income, or pay any tax, if one is due, at the time required, but shall voluntarily make a correct return of income and pay the tax due within sixty days thereafter, there shall be added to the tax an additional amount equal to 5 per centum thereof (in no case less than $2) and an additional 1 per centum for each month or fraction of a month during which the tax remains unpaid.

"If any taxpayer fails voluntarily to make a return of income, or to pay a tax, or additional tax, if one is due, within sixty days of the time required, the tax, or additional tax, shall be doubled and such doubled tax shall be increased by 1 per centum for each month or fraction of a month from the time the tax was originally due to the date of payment."

Hodcarriers to Get $10 a Day.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 15.—The building trades tie-up ended here today when the hodcarriers and wheelbarrow men agreed to return to work under the old scale of $8 a day until May 15, when they will receive $10 a day. Further trouble impends, however, as the carpenters now contend that in view of these increases they are entitled to at least $12 a day instead of $10. The carpenters ask for such an increase beginning April 23.

SAYS REDS STARTED STRIKE.

Security League Official Attacks Thomas and Radical Groups.

The Passaic and Garfield silk strike originated in Communist Headquarters in Chicago and was planned by the Communists as "a lesson in revolution," according to Joseph Cashman of the National Security League, who addressed a luncheon of the Lions Club yesterday at the Commodore.

Mr. Cashman asserted that Norman Thomas, who was arrested for making a speech in the strike area, is at the head of a plot to corrupt the morals of college boys and girls, and has taken City College students with him to New Jersey to instill in them the seeds of revolution.

"All pacifist organizations and all Bolshevist, Communist and Socialist organizations, which are one and the same thing because they have interlocking directorates, are controlled from Russia," Mr. Cashman added. "The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom is controlled entirely from Russia.

"The foreigners come here to make money to take back to Europe. They insist on living in filthy, unkempt circumstances, because that is their nature, not because they aren't making good wages. The Communists engineer strikes, not to better living conditions, but solely and for no other reason than to create unrest between workers and their employers in the hope of revolution."

Mr. Cashman, in conclusion, called Arthur Garfield Hays of the American Civil Liberties Union a revolutionist.

BAR WHITE HOUSE PICKETS.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—A delegation representing the Passaic strikers filed a protest with President Coolidge today declaring that their constitutional rights had been revoked. Then they left without doing any actual picketing of the White House as they had planned.

The police informed the leaders that there was no legal objection to the five adults expressing their protest by means of picketing and signs. But it was explained that the children who had been brought along could not thus act and so the picketing plans were abandoned and they returned to Passaic.

The group included two men, three women and six children, who appeared rather well dressed, but none too well fed. They trooped into the White House grounds at about 11 o'clock carrying placards which told the story of their troubles. They were told by the White House police that the banners could not be displayed within the grounds and they laid them on the doorstep of the Executive offices while their leader conferred with Secretary Sanders.

Carl Trocola presented affidavits alleging that the Constitution had been set aside by the mill owners and New Jersey authorities and asked that the President aid the strikers. Mr. Sanders accepted the protest. The group then left quietly, apparently prepared to return home. At this time photographers pleaded with them to display their banners outside the White House grounds. As they were doing so, Inspector Evans, Assistant Superintendent of Police, ordered the children to disperse. He told their leaders that it was in violation of the Child Labor law to use children in picketing work. This dictum was accepted and mothers and children went away.

The banners displayed by the adults read:

"Our meeting places are closed by the police. Free speech is denied."

"Our leaders are illegally arrested."

"Mr. President, will you help us get our constitutional rights?"

Children carried banners which bore these inscriptions:

"Yes, we, too, want to eat"; "Our Mothers work nights, our fathers days, who can care for us?" "That 10 per cent. wage cut took our milk away"; "The truth is on our side"; "Mr. President, help us maintain our constitutional rights"; "Come to Passaic and see how we live."

THOMAS GIVES BAIL IN 'RIOT ACT' ARREST

Paterson on Saturday, gave rise to rumors that Governor A. Harry Moore had unofficially taken a hand in the situation. It was said that the Governor, displeased by the arbitrary attitude of the police, and Sheriff Nimmo had indicated that Sheriff Morgan would not gain favor by following in the footsteps of the Bergen County Sheriff unless disorder occurred.

Announcement was made at strike headquarters in Passaic that a committee would try to see Governor Moore and ask him to intervene and remove Sheriff Nimmo from Garfield. Governor Moore was confined to his bed with a cold in his Jersey City home, and the strikers who said their delegation would picket his home did not appear there. It was said the strikers would await an opinion from the State Attorney General to Governor Moore on the Sheriff's intervention.

All the gates of the Forstmann & Huffmann mills in Garfield were open today but observers said that few of the old employes returned. Many special deputy sheriffs sworn in by Sheriff Nimmo were housed in the mills. They said today they were satisfied with conditions, as their bed linen was changed daily and they were allowed telephone service, newspapers and furnished with excellent meals, as well as cards, dominos and checkers.

Strikers attempted to hold a meeting in Pioneer Hall in Garfield tonight but Sheriff Nimmo's deputies ordered the owner of the hall to keep it closed. The strikers went to Lodi and met in a coffee house. They declared that they were determined to remain on strike until they won their demands.

It was learned today that when Mr. Thomas was arrested yesterday and disappeared for three hours, he spent most of the time in the insurance office of Justice of the Peace Hargreaves in this city while Sheriff Nimmo, Justice Hargreaves, a representative of the prosecutor's office and several others prepared the complaint on which he was to be arraigned today.

Thomas Wanted Counsel.

Mr. Thomas demanded the privilege of having counsel present and was informed that he might be arraigned at once and held for the Grand Jury or that he could have a hearing later with counsel. He preferred to wait, but asked that Mrs. Thomas be permitted to speak to him on the telephone.

Mrs. Thomas said tonight in New York that she called her husband on the telephone, but was informed by some one at the jail that she could not speak to him as "there were not enough guards in jail to bring every man to the telephone."

"May I leave a message for him?" she asked.

"Nope," the man replied.

The hearing of the Thomas case was enlivened by several tilts between Justice Hargreaves and John Larkin Hughes, his lawyer, counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union. Justice Hargreaves declared that Garfield "was and is under riot law."

"There is no such thing as riot law," said Mr. Hughes. "That is a figment of somebody's imagination in this county."

Patrolman Matthew A. Donohue, who signed the complaint, testified he arrested Mr. Thomas when the latter spoke of heavy bail being fixed for Albert Weisbord, leader of the United Front Committee, as being "a mockery of justice." Under cross examination he admitted that the meeting had been peaceful but that he had considered it "illegal from the beginning" because he felt that Mr. Thomas's congratulation of Weisbord for handling the strike peacefully was "seditious."

Donohue refused to say why he had not arrested the defendant for sedition. Later he admitted that Mr. Thomas was arrested as the result of a prearranged plan formulated by Under-Sheriff Donaldson, whose blast on a whistle was the signal for the officers to break up the meeting.

Mr. Hughes held that if the Riot act was still in effect the gathering in Justice Hargreaves's office was illegal, as was any other gathering of thirty persons in the county. He asked, if the Riot act was in effect, when it would terminate, and the Justice said, "When the man who proclaimed it calls it off."

Mr. Thomas was then held for the Grand Jury and Deputy Sheriff Turo insisted that he go to the county jail. After considerable argument Mr. Thomas accompanied the deputy, and in the end Sheriff Nimmo permitted the transfer of bail.

Text of Riot Act.

The Riot act in New Jersey was passed in 1864. It reads:

That from and after publication of this act is any persons to the number of twelve or more, being armed with clubs, guns, swords or other weapons, or if any number of persons consisting of thirty or more shall be unlawfully, routously, riotously or tumultously assembled, any Justice of the Peace, Sheriff or Under Sheriff or constable of the county where such assembly shall be, shall, among the rioters or as near to them as he can safely come, command silence while proclamation is making, and shall openly and with a loud voice make or cause to be made proclamation in these or the like words:

State of New Jersey. By virtue of an act of this State entitled "An Act to Prevent Routs, Riots and Tumultous Assemblies" I am directed to charge and command all persons, being here assembled, immediately to disperse themselves and peacefully to depart to their habitations or to their lawful businesses upon the pains and penalties contained in this act. God save the State.

Those reading the proclamation are authorized to make arrests "if persons shall, after proclamation is made or attempted to be made, continue together and not disperse themselves for an hour."

Another provision is that if in making an arrest an official kills a person who resists, he shall be held guiltless. Those who resist the reading of the proclamation are declared guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by six months imprisonment or $100 fine or both. Those who continue together one hour after the act is read are liable to three years in jail and $1,000 fine for committing a felony.

Thomas Tells Position.

"The whole purpose of my speech was to stress the necessity of keeping within the law," said Mr. Thomas in commenting on his case. "The sole responsibility for the arrest is on the under Sheriff. The officer who made the arrest said he knew the meeting was morally all right, but that he knew nothing about the law.

"I have no particular complaint to make about the officers or against my arrest. My complaint is against the law which holds that five men congregating at a given place are criminals. I maintain it is a slave state where a Sheriff, with a deliberate and avowed purpose of breaking a strike and without any act of violence on the part of the strikers, declares virtual martial law. I do not believe that is the law of New Jersey, yet that is the interpretation given to it by the Sheriff of Bergen County."

Union Backs Plea.

The strikers' plea for intervention by Governor Moore was backed by the American Civil Liberties Union which, through Arthur Garfield Hays protested against the "tricking of defendants' counsel" and the punishment of strike leaders "not for their acts but for their opinions."

Mr. Hays cited instances which he said showed that the Garfield and Bergen County officials had exceeded their legal authority. He said that on Monday he observed the Under Sheriff of Bergen County prevent a peaceful assemblage in a private garden in Garfield and in a private hall in the same town.

Under Sheriff Donaldson, according to Mr. Hays, said there would be no more meetings in Garfield, making no distinction between peaceful and riotous meetings, justifying himself on the ground that he had read the Riot act once.

Robert Wolf, said the lawyer, who did not move on fast enough, was held in $5,000 bail, an exorbitant figure for an offense that could not be greater than disorderly conduct.

In appearing for Robert Dunn, also under arrest, said Hays, he was directed to a court room to wait. After waiting an hour he learned Dunn had been arraigned in another place and that Justice Hargreaves had fixed $10,000 bail. The Justice refused to reopen the matter or to reduce the bail, but Hays asserted that Hargreaves said he would have to consult men "higher up."

Tells of Writer's Arrest.

"This is not a court of law, but of martial law," Mr. Hays quoted Justice Hargreaves as saying. He added that he appeared also for Esther Lowell, writer for The Federated Press, whose crime was that she stopped to help a woman to her feet after she had been shoved by the police.

"On this arraignment I pointed out that the charge was that she had not dispersed within an hour after the reading of the Riot act, whereas the police officer testified that he had arrested her within three minutes," said the statement of the lawyer which was sent to Governor Moore. "She certainly was not guilty under that charge. At this the Judge declared an adjournment and went into another room to confer with third parties. When he came back he disregarded the clear proposition of the law and held her for the Grand Jury."

In conclusion Mr. Hays said:

"If you, as Governor of the State, disapprove of this terrorism and brutality, this mockery of justice in the first court, to wit, the Justice's Court, to which these people come, it would seem that you should make your position clear, and if impeachment proceedings are within your jurisdiction, something should be done so that at least in a court of justice there be some endeavor to mete out justice."

How the Strike Began.

Strike talk was heard in Passaic last September after the Botany Worsted Mills and other mills, except those of the Forstmann & Huffmann Company, announced a 10 per cent. wage reduction.

Weisbord, a Harvard Law School graduate and an alumnus of City College, worked "under cover" for several months in Passaic and vicinity organizing the United Front Committee, which called the strike on Jan. 25 as a protest against the wage reductions. The Botany Worsted Mills were the first affected. The strike spread to the Gera Mill, the Garfield Worsted Mill and the New Jersey Spinning Mills.

The Forstmann & Huffmann Company announced several weeks after the strike was called that it would close its plant and place its workers on call because of "intimidation by strikers."

The mills were crippled by the strike, but began operating in a small way as soon as possible. From week to week the number of workers increased, and the strikers held mass picketing demonstrations, filing past the mills for hours every day after attending meetings addressed by Weisbord and other speakers.

Mounted policemen charged the strikers several times when the picket leaders insisted on marching past the mills, and clubs were used freely. On several occasions the cameras of newspaper photographers were smashed and reporters were hustled away from the picket lines by the police.

Peace Attempts Fail.

Mayor McGuire of Passaic attempted to bring peace five weeks after the strike began, but the strikers insisted that the United Front Committee be recognized. The mill owners refused. Several weeks later mediators for the United States Department of Labor suggested that the strikers return to work pending arbitration of their demands and ignored Weisbord. The strikers asked that Weisbord be allowed to represent them.

The mill owners, from the beginning of the strike, have declared they would not deal with the United Front Committee, because Weisbord, head of the committee, was a Communist. Weisbord replied that his beliefs had nothing to do with the grievances of the strikers and that he did not air his political views in the meeting halls.

Further clashes between police and the strikers followed, until they assumed the proportions of a serious industrial conflict spread over a wide front, including Passaic, Garfield, Clifton and Lodi.

Last Saturday the strikers arranged a demonstration of school children, but the police dispersed the youngsters and arrested Weisbord, who was held in $30,000 bail. His counsel argued that the amount was excessive, but was unable to obtain a reduction. The arrest of Weisbord was followed by the reading of the Riot act in Garfield on Monday, when nearly a score of arrests were made.

NEW YORK, April 16—The liquid kind being outlawed, what is your notion of "solid comfort"? Surely it is to lounge, sprawl, doze, smoke or breakfast in a luxurious robe. Gives one that "monarch-of-all-I-survey" feeling.

You will like this soft, handsome robe of ombré Terry cloth. Pattern is an all-over diamond design. Contrasting colors of blue-with-tan; red-with-gray; blue-with-brown; blue-with-green.

One house robe is indispensable. Two are advisable. Three are preferable. Exclusive, but not expensive.

DONOR OF $7,000,000 SEIZED FOR ALIMONY

$10,000 BOND FREES HIM

Defendant Had Planned to Sail to Sue for Divorce, According to Woman's Petition.

Almerindo Portfolio, who came here from Italy at the age of 10, got a job as errand boy with a cloak company, was general manager of the company at 20 because he "never watched the clock," and who gave his $7,000,000 business to six faithful employes in January, 1925, was arrested yesterday on a civil order obtained by his wife, Mrs. Mary J. Portfolio. She said that he intended to sail for Paris next Monday to establish a residence in order to divorce her.

The order was obtained from Supreme Court Justice Mahoney on the assertion by Mrs. Portfilio that she intends to apply for $3,500 a month alimony for herself and two children, aged 15 and 12 years. The purpose of such an order is to compel the husband to give a bond to secure the payment of any alimony that may be awarded.

Says Her Husband Is Wealthy.

Mrs. Portfolio's petition says that her husband is a man of great wealth, that he is chief owner of the Marbridge Building, Sixth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, and that he has recently been maintaining an expensive suite at the Hotel Plaza after vacating an apartment at 952 Fifth Avenue, where he paid $13,000 a year rent and $50,000 for the furnishings. Before the Portfolio's separated they lived in a $12,000 a year apartment at 325 West End Avenue and maintained two cars and two chauffeurs, while recently Mrs. Portfolio and her children have lived at 525 Park Avenue, paying $7,000 rent with $150 a month for two servants and $100 for a governess.

Mr. Portfolio was released by the Sheriff after he had given a bond for $10,000 required in Justice Mahoney's order. It was said that he had offered his wife $20,000 a year for herself and children but she refused this sum and brought the action for support.

Mrs. Portfolio's petition says they were married in 1908 and that her husband left her in September, 1923. She and the children were at Lake Placid that Summer, she said, and her husband came there several times, but toward the end of their stay he told her he would not be at their apartment when she and the children returned.

"I told him I would be where he was," the petition went on, and her husband replied, "Oh, no, you will not."

Planned to "Flitter About a Bit."

Mrs. Portfolio said her husband then removed his belongings from the West End Avenue apartment, and when she returned he told her he intended to "flitter around a bit." The petition said that in addition to his chief ownership of the Marbridge Building, appraised at $1,875,500, he has stocks valued at more than $1,000,000.

When he turned over his business to his employes and retired on Jan. 12, 1925, Mr. Portfolio said:

"These men are receiving only what they have earned by enthusiastic work and loyal service. To the man who becomes so engrossed in his work that he forgets the clock, there is an assurance of great success."

Mr. Portfolio got into the news on the eve of Christmas, 1918, when he gave a bond of $10,000 for the release of his negro cook who had been arrested in a dispute in a postal sub-station with another woman over mailing a Christmas package. Only a bond of $500 was necessary, but Mr. Portfolio said that the success of his Christmas dinner depended upon her and he gave $10,000 to be on the safe side.

MAY 1 IS HARVARD DAY.

Graduates Arrange Detailed Program for Visitors.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 15.—The detailed program for the annual Graduates' Day, which will be held on May 1 this year, and which will be conducted by the New England Federation of Harvard Clubs in cooperation with the Student Council, was announced today by the committee in charge. The active participation of undergraduates in the festivities and the invitation of the parents of graduates, students now in the university, and those who contemplate sending sons to Harvard in the future, are among the innovations which are expected to make the gathering of alumni one of the most unique in years.

Dean C. N. Greenough will open the informal talks in the morning and President Lowell will be the principal speaker at the afternoon luncheon, at which Governor F. S. Billings of Vermont will preside. The visitors will be the guests of the Athletic Association for the athletic events which will begin at 3 o'clock on Soldiers' Field.

The feature of the evening's entertainment will be a reading by Professor C. T. Copeland, at the Harvard Club, following a buffet supper also at the club.

Brooklynites Visit The Times.

SEEKS TO THROW OUT BISHOP BROWN'S SUIT

Defense Bases Its Move on the Contention That Episcopal Church Has No Legal Head.

The effort of the Protestant Episcopal Church authorities to quash the suit of former Bishop William Montgomery Brown against the Church to compel the restoration of his former rights as a Bishop, came before Supreme Court Justice Lydon yesterday. The proceeding is an application by William W. Skiddy to set aside the service of the papers on him as the "Treasurer" of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States. The Court reserved decision.

George Gray Zabriskie, a leading layman of the Church in this country and counsel for the New York Diocese, said that, although the Church has 3,000,000 members, it has no legal head or any other officer as have other incorporated and unincorporated societies, and that, since its purpose is entirely spiritual, it is not a legal entity, does not own a dollar's worth of property, and does not transact business in the manner of other organizations. The complaint makes allegations to the contrary, Mr. Zabriskie said, and asserts that Mr. Skiddy is a proper person upon whom service of the papers should be made.

Joseph W. Sharts of Cleveland, one of the attorneys for the Rev. Dr. Brown, said that an effort was being made to create the impression that the Protestant Episcopal Church was beyond the reach of any court. He read a report submitted at the last convention, he said, showing the ownership of property in the United States amounting to $240,000,000, with liabilities of $15,000,000, and setting forth the maintenance of "schools, seminaries, hospitals and other institutions." The report showed collections of $94,235,474. The attorney insisted that the question before the court was not what the church calls itself, but what it is.

Mr. Sharts said that Dr. Brown was not concerned so much with being returned to his former office of Bishop, but rather with being deprived of material relief, consisting of his pension and of moneys he could earn if he were still affiliated with the church.

In a reply Mr. Zabriskie said that no one believed that the Protestant Episcopal Church owned the Trinity property or the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. He said that, although Mr. Skiddy had been described as Treasurer of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, only about $15,000 of the enormous collections listed in the report had passed through his hands.

If the court decides to set aside the service and the ruling is upheld it will put an end to the action here.

CRITICIZE KELLOGG ON LAUSANNE TREATY

Bishop Garland's Letter Protests Against State Department's Activity for Ratification.

David Hunter Miller, Chairman of the American Committee Opposed to the Lausanne Treaty, made public yesterday a letter from the Right Rev. Thomas J. Garland, Bishop of Pennsylvania, to Secretary of State Kellogg, criticizing the State Department's activity in behalf of ratification of the treaty with Turkey in sending to 110 Bishops, who recently protested against ratification, a petition sent to Mr. Kellogg by missionaries and business men in Turkey.

"As a citizen," wrote Bishop Garland, "may I express my surprise that the Department of State should issue such a document? If there is one department in the country that knows the facts about our promises and obligations to the Armenians, certainly the Department of State should know.

"It seems to me there is little use in having ambassadors in foreign countries, if the unanimous opinion of all those who know the facts in the case are to be disregarded in favor of the little remnant of the mighty army of educators and welfare workers who are still allowed to remain in Turkey, and who through an evident desire to stay there look at the question from a local standpoint.

"I hope and pray that the President and his advisers as well as the Senate of the United States will look at this question from a larger point of view.

"May I venture to suggest that it would be wise to call into conference the former Ambassadors to Turkey, if the Department of State is at all in doubt? In closing may I again humbly protest against the Department of State issuing such a document as you forwarded to me? I would not have any objection to Senator Borah issuing it personally, but I do not think it should have been issued by your department."

TRANSIT BOARD HOLDS OVER

Governor Defers Making Appointments Until Next Week.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 15.—Although the terms of the present members of the New York City Transit Commission expire at midnight, Governor Smith said today that he would make no appointments before next week. The present Transit Commissioners will hold over until their successors have been appointed.

The Governor today signed the bill recommended by the Hughes Commission, fixing the terms of the Transit Commissioners at three, six and nine years. The present members of the commission have all served five-year terms.

A report that the Governor was considering the appointment of John F. Gilchrist, President of the State Tax Commission, as a Transit Commissioner, was not taken seriously by persons close to the executive. Governor Smith said this afternoon that the appointment of Mr. Gilchrist had never been suggested to him by any one.

PULLMAN NET $18,822,584.

In its report to the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities the Pullman Company shows net income for 1925 of $18,822,584 after all charges, which is equal to $13.94 a share earned on 1,350,000 capital shares. This compares with net income of $10,704,188, or $7.93 a share on the same basis in 1924.

Operating revenue of the Pullman Company for 1925 was $81,490,323, against $73,900,608 in 1924. Non-operating income last year reached $6,535,592 and in 1924 it was $2,281,384. Expenses of operation in 1925 were $64,711,292, compared with $62,685,109 in 1924. Deductions for other charges last year were $3,460,102, against $411,599 in the year before. After dividends of $10,738,872 and other appropriations of $2,114,601, a surplus remained of $5,969,111.

last week said that the wooden sides had been finished and that the canvas roof and lining were being put in place. The Norwegian Government has employed eighty members of the Norwegian navy and twenty coal miners, who, working by strong electric lights during the continuous darkness of Winter, built the great airhip shed. The loading, equipping and testing of the Norge for its final dash across the Pole for Alaska may take two or three weeks. It was, therefore, essential to the success of the adventure to have adequate housing for the 360-foot gas bag on its arrival at Spitzbergen. There is also in course of erection at King's Bay a mooring mast 110 feet high, which must be completed before the Norge makes its flight from Russia.

Will Await Word From Amundsen.

At Leningrad Colonel Umberto Nobile, the commander of the Norse, will await word by radio from Captain Amundsen that all is in readiness at King's Bay. On the first favorable weather conditions thereafter he, with his ship's company of twenty men, will start on what is regarded as possibly the most perilous leg of their flight. They will fly almost due north to Vardo, near Hammerfest, on the extreme northern coast of Norway. If wind and weather conditions are unfavorable to further flight, they will moor there. If flying conditions are favorable, Colonel Nobile will head for the small patch of land in the Arctic, which is Spitzbergen. With good visibility the flight to Spitzbergen may be easy. If fogs, strong winds and sudden and great changes in temperatures are encountered, the Norge may have a serious time locating the comparatively small island. With its cruising range of 3,200 miles, however, the Norge could spend many hours, if necessary, in the hunt for Spitzbergen without being in danger of running out of fuel. The difficulty in finding Spitzbergen was emphasized by Captain Amundsen in an article in THE NEW YORK TIMES in which he criticised the plan of Captain Wilkins to fly from Alaska to Spitzbergen in an airplane, saying that Spitzbergen was far too small a target for an airplane flying from a point 1,800 miles away.

Once safely at Spitzbergen, preparations for the final flight will begin. When the ship's equipment is perfect, the explorers will rely on their meteorologists to guide them as to conditions ahead of them in the flight, 600 miles north to the top of the world and then 1,200 miles down on the other side to Point Barrow. On leaving New York, Captain Amundsen said that he hoped to get off in May, but would fly in June, if compelled to postpone it until then. Delay is unfavorable, because the arctic atmosphere, comparatively clear early in May, rapidly becomes foggy. In May of last year Amundsen was lost in a fog in his airplane flight for the Pole. The dirigible is not so much at the mercy of fog as an airplane is, but clouds and mists might seriously impede the flight across the Pole.

The supplies which are being sent to Spitzbergen include 5,000 bottles of hydrogen, enough to inflate the dirigible twice over. As the gas contracts with cold and expands with heat, the great changes in temperature which sometimes occur in the Arctic at this period of the year constitute a grave danger. Too much contraction from cold might reduce the lifting power of the Norge to the sinking point, while too much heat causes danger of bursting, or forces the navigators to let out so much gas there there is no margin of safety in case of meeting a sudden drop in temperature. On this account quantities of bottled hydrogen must be carried in order to pump it into the gas bags after forced release of the gas.

Idea of a Race Repudiated.

Captain Amundsen has steadily repudiated the idea of a race for the Pole. His main interest, he says, is geographical—the discovery of new lands. Amundsen's last flight, however, was an attempt to reach the Pole. He has cast doubt on Peary's discovery of the Pole, so that the crossing of the Pole constitutes one of the major objectives of his expedition. Lieut. Com. Byrd also regards the conquest of the Pole by air as an important objective, although he, too, is hunting for new land. There is "an element of competition" in it, according to Byrd. Captain Wilkins has disclaimed any interest in the Pole and has ever asserted that, out of respect to Peary, he will deliberately avoid the Pole, if he finds himself near it. On the other hand, he does intend to fly across the Arctic Ocean and approximately over the top of the world, so he is, therefore, in competition with Amundsen.

Which of the three has the advantage at present is not clear. Amundsen and Byrd both expect to be ready to fly about May 15, and it may be nip and tuck between them. Captain Wilkins is gradually building up a supply of fuel by using one of his planes as a flying tank-wagon to deliver gasoline from Fairbanks to Point Barrow. His program calls for two exploratory flights before he attempts to cross the Arctic from Alaska to Spitzbergen. If all three explorers meet with good luck their major flights may begin at about the same time.

HELSINGFORS, Finland, April 15.—The airship Norge did not cross Finland on the way to Leningrad. It was expected about 9 A. M. and crowds assembled on Observatory Hill to see it and a flying squadron went out to meet it. Then came news that it would not arrive before 3 P. M. owing to the weather.

The Norge, communicating by wireless with the Sandhamn wireless station near Helsingfors, inquired about fog and wind conditions. At 12:30 P. M. the Norge requested signals from Sandhamn to enable it to determine its bearings, stating that it was in a thick fog.

Shortly after this news reached Sandhamn the Norge deflected its course, crossing Esthonia and not Finland.

BYRD SAYS "ALL IS FINE."

Arctic Flier Praises His Ship in Message to Washington Friends.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Commander Richard E. Byrd, leader of an aerial expedition to the North Pole, now aboard the steamer Chantier on his way to Tromso, Norway, sent a message to J. Harry Philbin of the Emergency Fleet Corporation stating that "everything is fine." His message follows:

WILKINS FLIES AGAIN FOR POINT BARROW

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, April 15 (AP).—Speeding up preparations for his coming aerial expedition over the Arctic Ocean in search of land, Captain George Hubert Wilkins took off here today in the airplane Alaskan on the third flight to Point Barrow with supplies.

Lieutenant Carl B. Eielson, aviator of the expedition, piloted the plane. The 550 mile trip to the supply base at Point Barrow, the starting point of the proposed Arctic flight, was expected to require about five hours.

The plane carried 4,300 pounds of gasoline to swell the store already left at Point Barrow on the previous flights. The take-off was made after two runs the length of the aviation field of the Fairbanks Airplane Corporation. The ground was soft.

Captain Wilkins undertook the trip despite an injury to a hand and arm which he sustained Saturday while guiding the Alaskan as the plane landed on the ice at the edge of the Arctic Ocean at Point Barrow.

It was believed that Captain Wilkins and Lieutenant Eielson would return tomorrow. Members of the expedition intimated that the next flight to Point Barrow would be the final trip from Fairbanks, with both the Alaskan and the three-engined Detroiter participating.

MAUNA LOA ERUPTION DEPOPULATES TOWN

HILO, Hawaii, April 15 (AP).—The river of lava which began pouring from Mauna Loa last night reached the edge of Kamaoa Forest, south of the peak, today. It moved sluggishly in a zigzag course across the upper Kau district, a sparsely settled region marked by previous lava flows.

There is much excitement in the Kau district and in the South Kona district, to the north of Kau, owing to the many earthquakes and the uncertainty of the extent of lava flow.

The people of Honomalino, a town on the seacoast Southwest of Mauna Loa, frightened by a roaring sound similar to that of the Alika flow in 1919, began moving northward.

The Alika flow is moving in two streams, one toward Honomalino, the other toward Waichinu. The flaming rock is expected to reach the government road tomorrow night. The road, which encircles the island of Hawaii, is three miles inland from Honomalino.

The present outbreak apparently is from one of the five original cones noted in Saturday's eruption. It starts from the 8,000-foot level.

The flow toward Kau is heading between Kahuku and Waiohino and at noon was 6½ miles from the Government road and half a mile from the upper end of the flow of 1868.

The flow is ten miles long, a thousand feet wide and ten feet high. The lava is advancing in the forest at the rate of a mile every 35 hours. It is apparently slowing down.

Professor Thomas A. Jaggar, in charge of the Hawaiian Volcano Observatory, saw signs of the present eruption yesterday from a place 13,000 feet high, but it was impossible at that time to go down the mountain side. He returned to the Volcano House last night and planned to go to the Kau district to observe the flow.

Praises Millard Articles on China.

Dr. James Yard, former editor of the China Christian Advocate of Shanghai, a resident in China for sixteen years, speaking yesterday on Chinese affairs before the League of Neighbors at a luncheon of the Union of the East and the West at 120 Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, referred to articles on China written by Thomas F. Millard and published in THE NEW YORK TIMES. Dr. Yard said the articles were "very informing and enlightening," and praised them for "catching the spirit of new China and for their interpretation of current Chinese affairs."

TIMES MEN PUSH ON IN ALASKAN SLUSH

By WILLIAM C. LYON.

ficulties which have lasted consistently since my feet went bad.

Traveling in this country necessitates the wearing of moccasins when it is cold and mukluks or water boots when it was thawing and wet. Both of these types of footgear have no soles such as we are accustomed to wearing in the States. For Indians and natives in this country the soft soled shoes without heels may be the thing, but it veritably is bad for the outsider.

My feet had gradually become more tender and achy, and on this hard day's travel I managed in some unexplainable manner to hang a big toe under the crust of the snow in one of the breakthroughs and gave it a wrench which pulled it out of joint in such a way that it amounted virtually to a broken toe.

The first aid kit was packed in a bag and lashed in the sled with the rest of the cargo. I decided to rough it out until we reached a cabin before I attempted to treat the damaged member.

That was by no means a wise move. When we were within about two miles of the cabin I reached the stage where I could no longer mush with the team. I put on snowshoes and made the final two miles under agonizing difficulties.

After I doctored and bandaged the toe at the shelter cabin, I attempted to mush on. We had gone less than a quarter of a mile, with the sled continuously breaking through the snow to the ground and the dogs unable to drag it out, when we gave up in despair and took to the shelter cabin for the night.

We were out next morning an hour before daylight to find a fairly hard frozen crust. We had traveled eleven miles 8 o'clock when we reached a second shelter cabin where we stopped and and had breakfast. From that time on, the snow began to disappear rapidly and in the course of the day we traveled across the tundra with only a trail of snow about two inches deep.

We reached a shelter cabin toward the middle of the afternoon and had lunch. There was a stretch ahead of ten miles to the cabin, used by the mail teams at the foot of Old Woman Mountain. We started for it and our troubles began again, as we ran into a slough across which the trail leads under normal conditions on the ice. The ice was gone and there was a pond of water.

Three-Mile Detour to Gain 200 Yards.

I finally worked out a detour and dragged the sled across the bare tundra for a distance of three miles, to cross what would have been a couple of hundred yards in normal weather.

We reached Old Woman Mountain about 6:30 o'clock. We had made forty miles as the day's travel. It was the first really respectable day's travel we had accomplished in more than a week.

We crawled into our sleeping blankets, stretched out on the floor of the cabin and slept the sleep of the just for a long night.

The next morning was Easter Sunday. What of the trail was left was well frozen and it looked as if we would have a good day of travel. At the start the trail led around the base of Old Woman Mountain and up hill to the broad expanse of tundra. For a few hours we had only tundra and no snow.

The trails through that part of the country are marked by log tripods placed every few hundred yards where there is no snow on the ground, as was the case there.

It is remarkable how easily we can lose the trail, and we did it frequently during that day. Toward early afternoon we came down a little hill toward a clump of willows, which indicated the presence of a slough.

A Vision That Failed.

We had visions of a stretch of ice-covered lake which would give us an easy run for a little way and the prospect of a resting spell for a few minutes at least.

The vision was all wrong. We went through the clump of willows over a well-packed drift of snow, which had blown up and frozen on the side of the slough.

Suddenly we came to a beautiful expanse of open water, where once there had been an ice trail. There stood the tripods, several of them leading down through the water for about a quarter of a mile and out on the other side. All we had to do was to get to the tripods on the other side. The water was too deep to chance fording.

Around the sides of the slough was a tangle of willows for a distance of some hundred yards or so. It took us just an hour and a half of scouting to pick out a way we could get around and then another hour to drive the team through it. We consumed two hours and a half in making our way across a section of trail that under normal conditions would have been traveled in probably five minutes.

Our scheduled destination for that day was Unalakleet. We had been told that the last seven or eight miles of the trip led along the surface of a river and into the village of Unalakleet. We pictured at least a whirlwind finish after the difficulties along the portage.

We struck two or three more of the open water places in the course of the afternoon, and when pitch darkness came we were still several miles from the banks of the river. We traveled as long as we could see the trail.

Already we had decided that it would be unsafe to attempt to travel on the river in the darkness, but we had hoped to reach the edge and camp and make the dash into Unalakleet early in the morning.

Rabbit Starts Dogs Pell-Mell

Our dogs appeared to be just about all in. We could not imagine there was another spurt left in them. There we guessed wrong again. We were traveling rather peacefully along a thin trail of snow across the tundra. It was getting very dark.

A rabbit jumped up from the edge of the trail and before we could realize what was happening the dogs were sailing after him at a breakneck speed, running at right angles to the trail. They took us two hundred yards across the tundra before we could stop them. It took all of ten minutes to get them back on the trail.

We went about a quarter of a mile further through the darkness, when we found a small clump of fir. Here we built a big fire, made a pot of tea and ate a few hardtack and crawled into the sleeping bags, with nothing but the fir trees between us and the stars.

A great Easter Day for us. We felt neither peace on earth nor good-will toward any man.

We were up next morning about 4 o'clock and on the way in a short time. There were no preliminaries of breakfast or other preparations for the day. We were thirteen miles from Unalakleet and about six miles from the river.

We made the trip in and reached the village in the forenoon. The ice on the surface of the river began to work to the disadvantage of the dog's feet, and there began more trouble, which have added to our burdens since.

From that day to this we have used something like $50 worth of dog moccasins at the going rate of $2 a dozen. In spite of this precaution we have left virtually a trail of blood behind us.

We rested for the remainder of the day at Unalakleet and worked on the sore feet of the dogs and the much sorer feet of ourselves.

On to Norton Sound.

From Unalakleet the trail led for about thirty-five miles over bare tundra to the shores of Norton Sound at a place called Foothills. In addition to the bare tundra there was a range of mountains to be crossed.

We were advised that it would be impossible for us to drag the load we carry across that tundra and mountain with our dogs.

Acting on this advice we employed a native boy with a team to take about half the load and pilot us across.

The advice was all correct. Had we attempted the trip alone, I have no doubt we would now be somewhere between Unalakleet and Foothills. As it was, I took a plunge into the icy waters of a creek up to my waist and was forced to stop out on the open tundra and change my clothes.

We reached the cabin of the native at Foothills about 7 o'clock in the evening, and after a hearty meal of caribou steak and trimmings felt a little better. From that point on, our going has been steadily improved, but the wear on the feet of the poor dogs has been terrible.

From Foothills to the village of Shaktolik, a distance of about thirty miles, the trail leads along the beach of Norton Bay, and the going was comparatively easy.

Longest Run of the Trip.

We stayed in the cabin of a half-breed Russian and native at Shaktolik and the next day made our longest run in a day of the entire trip so far. From Shaktolik to the village of Koyuk at the mouth of the Koyuk River is a distance of about fifty-five miles, leading directly across Norton Sound, and there is no staked trail.

We took a native boy as guide from the village of Shaktolik a few miles until he could point out for us the land marks to follow. The only difficulty we had in the day's journey was the sore feet of the dogs. We put on moccasins until along in the afternoon when they ran out and the dogs had to make the best of it until we reached Koyuk. Here we put up for the night at the cabin of a native called Big Sam, and next day continued our journey to Candle.

SAYS WILSON SWUNG BACK TO TUMULTY

REFUSED TO RUN HIMSELF

CLASH IN CABINET MAKING

Mrs. Wilson Is Said to Have Opposed Bryan—Brandeis Declared Kept Out by New Englanders.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Intimate pictures of Woodrow Wilson are contained in a volume by James Kerney, owner and editor of The Trenton Times, published today by the Century Company. As indicated by its title, "The Political Education of Woodrow Wilson," it takes its subject through that period of his career which began with his candidacy for Governor of New Jersey and ended with his death in February, 1924.

Mr. Kerney was on friendly terms with Mr. Wilson throughout that period. His newspaper supported the Wilson policies, and there was a degree of contact between the two that gave Mr. Kerney ample opportunity for observation and appraisement of the man who became an outstanding world figure.

Mr. Kerney was an intimate of Joseph P. Tumulty, Mr. Wilson's secretary as Governor of New Jersey and as President, and there are revelations in the book which illuminate the close association of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Tumulty and furnish a new angle in connection with the rift in their friendship.

Mr. Kerney discloses that while Mr. Wilson and Mr. Tumulty never saw each other after the break, the former President, just before his death, proposed Mr. Tumulty as a candidate for Senator from New Jersey and praised him highly. This was after Mr. Wilson had rejected a suggestion that he, himself should stand for the Senate.

Found Wilson Bitter Toward Senate.

The disclosure is given in a chapter entitled "Last Talks With Wilson," in which the author tells of visits to the stricken ex-President at the residence in S Street, Washington, where he spent the nearly three years of life that remained to him after he left the White House.

There are many interesting sidelights cast on Woodrow Wilson in this chapter, including his critical comment on the European statesmen with whom he dealt in Paris and his deep resentment toward those who dominated the policies of France.

"It was my privilege to spend the afternoons of Oct. 23 and Dec. 7, 1923—he died Feb. 3, 1924—with Wilson at his Washington home," Mr. Kerney writes.

"At the instance of Judge Charles F. Lynch of the Federal bench, I had earlier suggested that in view of his physical breakdown he might find an easy way to emerge from his retirement and give effectual voice to his ideas by standing for the United States Senate from New Jersey—not a particularly new thought. * * *

"The idea at first struck his fancy, and at our meeting on Oct. 23 he asked me to go to New York and canvass the ground with Norman Davis and Bernard M. Baruch, who, he said, 'are my present political advisers.'

"But while appearing ready to consider the Senate as a remotely possible outlet for leadership, his thoughts seemed plainly elsewhere. He was bitter in his expressions of contempt for the Senate itself, and at one point he said, with a flash of the old time vigor:

"'There is only one place, you know, where I could be sure of effectively asserting that leadership.'

Hoped for 1924 Nomination Tender.

"That was the nearest I ever heard him come to a declaration of candidacy, but, as was the case in 1920, his intimates knew that he had not given up all hope that the 1924 convention might at least tender him a nomination.

"The 1924 Democratic candidate, he declared, would not be agreed upon until the National Convention was two or three days old; meanwhile he expected to lay before the delegates a program of principles that would bring vindication at the polls. There was to be no backing down.

"It was impossible to pin him down to writing anything, however. Frequently he spoke of finding a way of assisting liberal thought, but aside from a remarkable radio speech in November, he did nothing. * * *

"'I am going to look at myself as though I did not exist,' he said, 'to just consider the whole thing in an impersonal way.

"'From the messages I get I realize that I am everywhere regarded as the foremost leader of the liberal thought of the world, and the hopes and aspirations of that liberal thought should find some better place of expression than in the Senate. There is only one place, you know, where I could be sure of effectively asserting that leadership.

"'Outside of the United States the Senate does not amount to a damn. And inside the United States the Senate is mostly despised; they haven't had a thought down there in fifty years.

"'You know and I know that I have a temper, and if I was to go to the Senate I would get into a row with that old Lodge, who no longer counts for anything.'"

It was then that Mr. Wilson suggested that Mr. Kerney talk over the matter with Messrs. Baruch and Davis.

Mr. Kerney gives a picture of the helpless, stricken ex-President.

"His spirit appeared to be badly shot that October day," continued Mr. Kerney. "The morning newspapers had printed official denials of one of those periodic news ticker rumors of his death.

"I think the visit of David Lloyd George on the previous afternoon had been a bit of a disappointment too. According to the former President, about all that Lloyd George appeared to want to hear was a repetition of some of the limericks with which Wilson had regaled the European statesmen at Paris and Versailles.

"Despite the unhappy estrangement, Wilson never lost his admiration for Tumulty's experience and service.

"A few days after he had asked me to go to New York and talk with Baruch and Davis, about the wisdom of considering the Senate possibility, I received a letter dated Oct. 30, 1923, suggesting Tumulty for the Senatorship as a man 'whose political training has been more varied than that of any other man I know,' and one who 'would make some of the reactionary Senators sit up and take notice of the arrival of modern times and circumstances.'

"Tumulty, Wilson declared, had proved himself a redoubtable debater when he was in the New Jersey Legislature, and he declared he felt it to be a duty to suggest him for the Senatorship."

The conference of Messrs. Baruch, Davis and Kerney resulted in the conclusion that the suggestion of Wilson or Tumulty for Senator from New Jersey was not practical: "Neither had lived in New Jersey for a decade."

Bitter Against France Over Ruhr.

"When I went back to see Wilson on Dec. 7, he was in better spirits. * * * When I reminded him that there was something of an international furor over his radio reference to the 'sinister climax' of France and Italy as having 'made waste paper of the Treaty of Versailles,' he fired back, in a spirited voice: 'I would like to see Germany clean up France, and I would like to meet Jusserand and tell him that to his face.'

"The French tactics in the Ruhr had especially aroused his contempt, and the remark was, of course, an expression of his disgusted attitude at what he then regarded as the French bad faith, ingratitude and avarice, in view of America's generosity in winning the war.

"When Marshal Foch made his triumphal tour of America in October and November, 1921, Wilson had not seen him. The former President was conveniently ill on the day that Foch visited the S Street home. * * *

"At Paris Foch had talked so much of force methods and had been such a persistent advocate of war machinery for France, that Wilson had come to regard him as an excitable militarist, whose sole philosophy was, in Foch's own favorite war-time phrase, to 'Kill boches.'

"Wilson was plainly disgusted with French politicians when he talked with me in December. None among them, he said, save Louis Loucheur, had told him the truth.

"Stanley Baldwin's defeat was a good thing not only for England but for its effect on Poincaré, 'who is a bully,' he added.

"Wilson was thoroughly displeased with President Raymond Poincaré, who had played such a mischievous part in bringing the war."

Mr. Kerney notes that "the death of Bonar Law had saddened Wilson very much."

Linked Coolidge With Business.

Of President Coolidge's message to Congress on the previous day he said, according to Mr. Kerney:

"His master's voice has spoken."

Mr. Kerney goes on to say:

"The message did not breathe one human hope, he said, but it would insure the renomination of Coolidge by the business crowd."

Of the Administration's World Court idea, Mr. Kerney quotes Mr. Wilson as saying:

"They don't know where they're drifting. Hughes is at sea and they have no program."

To this Mr. Kerney adds:

"There is no secret about the resentment he felt at the officials of his Administration who resigned before their time in order to earn big fees."

When Mr. Kerney remarked that Mr. Wilson had said "a very handsome thing about Tumulty" in Wilson's letter to Kerney, the former President answered, as quoted by Mr. Kerney:

"It's the way I felt. Tumulty would make them sit up and take notice; he could render the country fine service in the Senate."

"But there was no opening that might encourage hope for a reconciliation," adds Mr. Kerney.

"This limerick of his own," says Mr. Kerney, "which he had recently put together to amuse—or perhaps shock—a rather prim woman friend he repeated with considerable glee:

There was a young girl from Missouri
Who took her case to the jury.
She said, 'Car Ninety-three
Ran over my knee.'
But the jury said, 'We're from Missouri.'

"There was some yarning," Mr. Kerney goes on, "and with considerable glee he repeated a couple of Alice Roosevelt's best stories about President Coolidge and General Sawyer." But Mr. Kerney does not disclose these stories.

Choosing of the First Cabinet.

One chapter of Mr. Kerney's book is devoted to the manner in which Mr. Wilson's first Cabinet was chosen, the details of which Mr. Kerney knew through his close association with those around the then President-elect.

He says that "Wilson was personally very eager to have Louis Brandeis in his first Cabinet" and attributes his failure to do so to "the big financial interests of New England, victims of the Brandeis exposures," mentioning in this connection his classmate, Cleveland Dodge, who, according to Mr. Kerney, acted in behalf of Henry L. Higgenson of Boston, and his law partner, James Storrow."

"Richard Olney, for whom Wilson had a considerable regard, was drawn in to settle the matter," Mr. Kerney says.

Mr. Kerney also declares that Mrs. Ellen Axsom Wilson, the President's first wife, was strongly opposed to having William J. Bryan in the Cabinet.

"She insisted that a split between Bryan and Wilson was inevitable," says Mr. Kerney.

To the late Thomas J. Pence, Washington correspondent of Josephus Daniels's Raleigh (N. C.) newspaper, and publicity director of the Wilson pre-convention campaign of 1912, Mr. Kerney attributes chiefly the appointment of Mr. Daniels as Secretary of the Navy, with the support of Bryan and Tumulty.

Wilson resisted, Pence persisted, says Mr. Kerney, and "finally one morning in the railroad station (at Trenton), Tumulty grew so earnest that Wilson surrendered," and Mr. Daniels was put on the Cabinet site. Mr. Kerney says also:

"Pence and Tumulty accelerated many other Cabinet selections, together with House they landed Albert S. Burleson as Postmaster General."

Government During Wilson Illness.

In a chapter entitled "Government by Proxy," Mr. Kerney tells how the business of the Government was conducted from the White House while President Wilson was supposed to be dying and the country was being kept in ignorance of the critical aspect of his illness.

Of President Wilson's demand for the resignation of Secretary Lansing, Mr. Kerney says that "because of the severe nature of his illness, it was four months before Wilson was made fully acquainted with the fact that after his collapse, in early October, Lansing had suggested that the Vice-President should take command and that in the meanwhile the Cabinet had been conferring."

Mr. Kerney mentions that "there had been frequent open assertions in the Senate that the reins of Government were actually being handled by Tumulty and a little group at the White House—which was the fact."

Mr. Kerney says that Democratic politicians received "a great fright" when they heard that President Wilson was to marry again.

"But none in the Cabinet," he adds, "dared to speak to the President of their misgivings. Tumulty intimated that it might be well to delay the marriage until after the 1916 Presidential election, with the result that he never again enjoyed the favor of the family circle."

United States to Be Represented at Geneva In Six Conferences of League in One Month

GENEVA, April 15.—During the month beginning April 26, the United States is expected to be represented in six important League of Nations Conferences.

These conferences are: the meeting of the Preparatory Committee for Economic Conference and the sixth session of the League Health Committee, both of which will open at Geneva on April 26; the International Passport Conference, which begins on May 12; the meeting of the Experts Committee appointed to study the question of double taxation and tax evasion, opening May 17; the Preparatory Commission for the Disarmament Conference, convoked for May 18, and the eighth session of the League Opium Commission scheduled for May 26.

Washington has already agreed to participate in the Disarmament Conference and the Passport Conference. It is likewise expected to send a representative to the Opium Conference inasmuch as last year the State Department, upon the invitation of the League, delegated American Consul Pinkney Tuck to sit with the Committee because of the prominent part the United States played in formulating the Hague Convention.

It is also expected that the American Surgeon-General will attend the meetings of the Health Commission.

Washington refused to send a delegation to the meeting of the Double Taxation and Tax Evasion Commission, but American interests will be represented by a delegate appointed by the International Chamber of Commerce at Paris. America will also be represented by private individuals acting in the capacity of experts at the meeting of the Preparatory Committee for the Economic Conference.

The only important League Conference, during this busiest of months in League history, in which the United States or the American people will not be represented will be the Committee appointed to study the reorganization of the League Council.

PEKING DESERTED BY DEFENDERS

CITY MAY SURRENDER TODAY

PEKING, April 15.—The heavy bombardment throughout last night on the southeast front was followed this morning by an advance, whereupon the defenders here began to withdraw. The attacking Fengtien forces of Chang Tso-lin have occupied Tungchow, about fifteen miles east of Peking, and some of the Kuominchun defenders are retiring northwest toward the Huiyuan Railway, which runs from Peking via Kalgan into Mongolia, and are thus avoiding entering this city.

It is reported tonight that the Kuominchun have evacuated the city and that the situation is in charge of a committee of public safety consisting of elder statesmen.

All the eastern gates were closed this afternoon to prevent the entrance of stray bodies of soldiers.

The situation in the immediate south is obscure but it is reported that the Fengtien forces are advancing and that a large number of the defenders are likely to be compelled to surrender.

The truth appears to be that the Kuominchun, some time ago, arranged for withdrawal, but before actually going sought to unite with Wu Pei-fu with the object of making a combined resistance to the Fengtien advance. Wu Pei-fu having resisted all their blandishments, the Kuominchun apparently have thrown up the sponge.

It is hoped that the situation will be cleared up tomorrow.

Tonight there is much excitement in the city, and foreigners have been warned to be ready to enter the Legation Quarter in case of any untoward developments.

Police With Rifles Guard Streets.

PEKING, April 15 (AP).—Fear of the impending arrival here of Manchurian forces of Chang Tso-lin, the dictator, is gripping the Chinese capital with the rattle of guns and vehicles of the retreating Kuominchun (national armies), which began today to withdraw from the capital after having managed to hold it since October, 1924.

General Wang, the new military commander of Peking, fears the Manchurian forces will insist on entering the capital tomorrow. The southern gates to the city were opened at 11 P. M. to admit the advance guard of the Kuominchun army coming up from Fengtai, whose retreat has been surprisingly rapid.

It appears to be the intention of the Kuominchun not only to evacuate Peking but to withdraw completely beyond the Nankow Pass on the road to Kalgan, or the Mongolian border. Trains carrying troops and high officials departed at intervals throughout the night.

A committee of ten prominent civilians has assumed the administration of affairs pending the reorganization of the Government.

President Tuan-Chi-jui, who fled to the Legation Quarter after his deposition last Saturday by Marshal Wu Pei-fu, the Chihli war lord, is reported to have left his place of safety with the intention of resuming his Presidential duties. Hearing of this, it is stated, former President Tsao Kun, who was freed from captivity by Wu just after the latter had ousted Tuan, moved immediately to the Legation Quarter.

One brigade of the Ninth Kuominchun Army surrendered this afternoon, after which the defenses around Tungchow collapsed, and Kuominchun troops began streaming toward the capital.

Their retreat demoralized the troops inside Peking, and General Lu Chung-lin, the Nationalist commander, then handed over control of the city to General Wang, who has been conducting peace negotiations.

General Wang, accordingly, wired the allied leaders that it was no longer necessary to besiege Peking.

TO PRESS CLEAN BOOKS BILL

Kennedy Will Seek Senate Action, but Defeat Is Predicted.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 15.—Senator Martin J. Kennedy, Democrat, of Manhattan, sponsor of the so-called clean books bill, served notice in the Senate today that early next week he would move to discharge the Rules Committee from further consideration of his measure.

This will make the fourth year that a vote has been taken on the floor of the Senate on this legislation. In other years it has been overwhelmingly defeated and its opponents predict the same fate for it at the present session.

Its companion measure is not expected to reach the floor of the Assembly.

As originally introduced the measure was more drastic than those of other years, but it was amended recently by Senator Kennedy and now has the endorsement of the New York Bar Association, according to its sponsor. In its amended form the measure would not affect newspapers to the extent it did originally.

KING OF SWAZILAND LOSES TO GEORGE V

Law Lords Hold That British May Eject Natives From Grazing Lands—King's Power Hit.

By T. R. YBARRA.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 15.—Sobhuza II, King of Swaziland, in South Africa, must swallow the bitter realization that he is no longer monarch of all he surveys, as were his ebony-colored royal ancestors. He must bow to the unpalatable fact that King George V has shorn him of his pristine power, though theoretically Swaziland is merely a British protectorate and Sobhuza still holds sovereign sway within its borders.

But before he admitted this grim truth Sobuza put up a stiff fight. That fight was carried through the courts of Swazilan dand ended only today in London, thousands of miles from Sobhuza's domain, when the British Privy Council, the most august court of appeal in the British Empire, decided that the King of Switzerland's appeal against the previous court ruling should be dismissed with costs.

It was all about just what rights King Sobhuza II and just what rights King George V had in certain South African grazing lands.

Before Sobhuza bowed to the inevitable he made it necessary for eminent jurists of world-wide renown to rally to vanquish him.

Yes, Sobhuza II may have the satisfaction of reflecting in his defeat that he was not vanquished until the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, Viscount Haldane, Lord Parmoor, Lord Phillimore and Lord Blanesburgh had burned midnight oil and racked their brains in an endeavor to show that the old-time royal glories of Swaziland's ruler were not what they used to be.

Sobhuza II went into court against an Englishman called Miller and "The Swaziland Corporation, Limited," who His Royal Highness alleged, were illegally evicting Swaziland natives from a tract of land acquired originally in 1889 from his royal father, King Umbandine of Swaziland. He argued despite the fact that the rights of Swaziland's King were considerably curtailed by the encroachments of the Dutch in South Africa and subsequently by those of the British conquerors of the Dutch, that they nevertheless remained sovereign rights, and that, therefore, the defendants had no right to evict natives.

But their lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council could not see it that way. After analyzing in bewildering legal phraseology how Swaziland, though still a protectorate, is to all intents and purposes a British dependency, they go on to show—still in language leaving the layman dishevelled and wild-eyed—that the defendants had a perfect right to evict natives in view of curtailed rights of the King of Swaziland.

COMMONS SUSPENDS 13 LABOR MEMBERS

LONDON, April 15 (AP).—Because of their obstructive tactics, thirteen Labor members of the House of Commons were suspended early today on motion of Neville Chamberlain. Their suspension was voted 163 to 76.

A further scene occurred in the House tonight, arising, as did the suspension of the Laborites, out of resentment against the Right Hon. James Fitzalan Hope, the Chairman of the committee, who was accused by the Laborites of displaying bias in favor of the Government.

Possibly because of the all-night session, the members were in a state of nervous tension. Mr. Hope was again in the chair, and his every ruling was challenged by the Laborites. They persisted, and the Chairman finally closured the debate on the Economy bill.

This provoked renewed protest that the Chairman, and the Government in supporting him, were treating the House "scandalously." J. H. Thomas, voicing the Laborites' anger, announced his intention of proposing a vote of censure on the Chairman because of his "partial and biased conduct."

COL. SMITH DESCRIBES RISE.

CHICAGO, April 15 (AP).—Colonel Frank L. Smith, who won the Republican nomination for Senator over Senator William B. McKinley in Tuesday's primary, has been a precinct committeeman for thirty-one years and believes that "the way to success in politics is to begin in a minor position with a small zone of influence."

"For thirty-one years I have been precinct committeeman almost continuously," he said at his Dwight (Ill.) home, where he received congratulations on his victory. "Nothing much to make a hurrah about in that, yet that job brings you in relationship with all your neighbors. You are their political father confessor. You hear their troubles. You have an influence that gathers momentum."

BRITISH COAL CRISIS WORRIES MINISTERS

SEES PREMIER AS ONLY HOPE

By T. R. YBARRA.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 15.—"I believe without exaggeration that the anxiety of the Cabinet over the disasters of the day is greater than during the war," declared the Home Secretary, Sir William Joynson-Hicks, this afternoon in referring to the coal crisis, which has reached something resembling a deadlock.

His diagnosis of the situation came after the Prime Minister, Stanley Baldwin, had talked for one hour this morning with representatives of the coal miners. The reason given by Sir William for his pessimism was that during the war all Britons were united, whereas the position today is quite different.

"There is a prospect—I will not say of war," he continued, "but of grave differences of opinion in the body politic, and the nation is not united as it was in the war. That is the anxiety before the minds of Ministers day and night.

"If the cloud bursts—if in the coal trade, and still more in other trades, there should be a difference of opinion leading to commercial strife, no man can prophesy the extent of the damage it will cause to the trade of the country as a whole."

Then Sir William said something with which thousands here cordially agree—that the greatest asset for peace between the warring mine owners and the miners was the character of Mr. Baldwin. The Prime Minister, said Sir William, has no axe to grind and he thinks only of the wellbeing of the country. The fact that he is now taking an active hand in seeking to reconcile the mine owners and the miners is certainly food for hope.

The ominous fact remains, however, that the coal subsidy will be withdrawn within a fortnight. If a reconciliation is not effected before then the result may well be an industrial catastrophe.

Besides Mr. Baldwin and the miners' executives, there were present at this morning's conference Sir Arthur Steel-Maitland, the Minister of Labor, and Colonel Lane-Fox, the Minister of Mines. The meeting was held in the Cabinet room at 10 Downing Street, the Premier's official home.

Meeting With Miners Held Privately.

Though the proceedings at today's meeting were strictly confidential, it is understood that the Prime Minister was urged by the miners' executives to give some indication of just what sort of support the Government might be disposed to give the coal industry after the subsidy expires on May 1.

Mr. Baldwin is said to have made it perfectly clear that the industry must not expect any further help beyond a strictly limited period. While steps toward a reorganization of the industry are being taken, the form of that help is undecided as yet.

When Mr. Baldwin saw the miners after the issue of the recent report of the Coal Commission he hinted the Government might assist the coal mining districts especially hard hit by the withdrawal of the subsidy.

The fact that there is a discussion of the form that Government help to the coal industry may take after the expiration of the subsidy shows that the hope of help in some form as a solution of the coal crisis dies hard.

This was wittily illustrated in a recent Punch cartoon in which Premier Baldwin and his Cabinet are shown trying to do a crossword puzzle and asking each other with knitted brows, "Can't you think of some word instead of subsidy which means the same thing?"

"Emperor" Cook Attends Meeting.

Among the miners' leaders at the conference were "Emperor" Cook and Herbert Smith, the President of the Mining Association. As he entered the council chamber Cook told his questioners that the negotiations were in a "delicate and difficult state." "But we are doing our best," he added.

At the termination of the conference the atmosphere seemed a bit more cheerful, though there was nothing tangible upon which to base any increased optimism.

The crucial difference between the mine owners and the miners is still a question of whether minimum wages shall be determined nationally or graduated according to special conditions in different districts.

The owners meanwhile have opened negotiations in districts, despite the opposition of miners and the hint conveyed to them that the Government does not favor such a step. The owners have also posted outside the mines a notice that the present subsidy arrangements will terminate on May 1. If there is no settlement by them the situation will virtually amount to a general lockout.

The probability is, despite the short time left, that nothing definite will happen during the next few days. Next week there will be another meeting between the owners and miners and the Prime Minister has asked the miners' leaders also to be available for another conference with him early next week.

"Emperor" Cook left today for Brussels, remarking "there can be no development here until next week" The object of his Brussels trip is to get support from foreign miners for the British miners in the present conflict.

Continental Miners Hold Aloof.

From Brussels tonight comes the news that W. H. Richardson, one of the heads of the British Miners' Federation, attended a meeting of the International Miners' Federation this morning and explained the British coal conflict to the delegates from the miners' viewpoint, without arousing any real enthusiasm.

Mr. Richardson was informed that fuller information was needed before the delegates could support the British miners' cause.

There is some sympathy in Belgium and Germany, it is stated, for the British miners, but nothing definite has been done yet toward helping them.

There is considerable resentment among the Continental miners against the British because the latter were not opposed to the granting by the British Government of a coal subsidy last Summer.

Another reason adduced for withholding Continental support from the British miners in case of a strike is that during the anthracite miners' strike in American anthracite coal was exported to the United States from Wales.

Germany Declares Law Protects Realty And That Americans Will Have No Trouble

BERLIN, April 15.—The German Government has concluded its inquiry into the grievances formulated by American owners of real estate in Germany t...oug" THE NEW YORK TIMES relative to the danger of being dispossessed of their property by the German courts and has given THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent the following statement on the subject:

"In most of the American cases difficulties have originated from the failure of the principals or their agents to duly exhaust the legal means for obtaining the necessary approval of the transfer of realty in Germany. After adequate information is forthcoming steps for perfecting the titles will undoubtedly soon be successful.

"The only case now pending in the courts is that of Simon W. Farber of Brooklyn. The lower court's decision against the American was not based on a retroactive law, but on non-observance of the formalities prescribed by the civil code of 1896. The case is now before the Prussian Supreme Court.

"While the German Government does not influence the courts, the Federal Supreme Court's recent decision in a similar case shows the way to cure technical imperfections. In no event will an American owner be required to return property without full compensation.

"If there be agents or associations making a business of contesting titles on mere technicalities, these have no official standing whatever and receive no support from either the national or the Prussian Government.

"The outstanding result of the investigation is that the wave of lawbreaking which, unfortunately, during the inflation crisis caused thousands of speculators, not only of foreign nationality, to defraud on the transfer tax, apparently has not touched American real estate owners, who, having in no case proved to be mala fide, need not generally anticipate any serious trouble."

PARIS, April 15.—The negotiations between Berlin and Moscow represent an effort by Germany to play both ends against the middle. That such is her right no one can contest. She seeks to join the League of Nations in order to be in good standing to the westward; she seeks a treaty with Russia in order to be in good standing to the eastward. Cleverly enough, she it was who notified Paris and London of what she was doing so that there could be no charge of bad faith.

However, it is not so simple as that. And, despite the best efforts of the Reich, Berlin will be unable to come off without criticism. Perhaps she does not expect to. For it is plain that when she writes into an agreement with Moscow provisions for benevolent neutrality she runs into the provisions of the Covenant of the League providing for common action by the League members against aggressors who may attack members of the fold.

But Germany has asked for special treatment in this regard. She has almost a promise from the big League nations to respect that demand, and of course such a provision in an agreement with Russia represents something for the renunciation of which she would ask a price. It all represents a move in the complicated game of European politics.

Let it not be supposed that the country which has had such an unprofitable experience with the Treaty of Rapallo is going into the new bargain with the Soviets with any great hopes of material profits. Even the most severe critics of the Germans would not call them that stupid. But Germany knows that the League leaders, especially England, fear a rapprochement between the Reich and Red Russia, and the former probably believes they will pay to prevent it. And she is probably right.

The Germans still face the same fight to get into the League which blocked them in March, and the more their entrance appears desirable, the greater is their expectation of entering on their own terms.

It would be pure fantasy to pretend that England and France are neutral with respect to the proposed Russo-German treaty. They do not like it. But Germany doubtless thinks that the former Allies will see the best way to prevent a real bargain between Moscow and Berlin will be to treat Germany well, including, perhaps, early evacuation of the occupied German territory.

And so it is not difficult to see through Germany's play. She tried it once at Genoa when she made the Treaty of Rapallo. Despite the miserable results of that effort she is trying the same game once again. She apparently still thinks Europe sees that picture painted by Lloyd George in Genoa of "a hungry Russia armed and led by an angry Germany." She may or may not be right in her calculation.

But there is a danger in her program she may not see. For it tends to weaken the faith of a great many Europeans, especially an important faction in France in the system of Locarno. This distrust may manifest itself. Shortly before the Locarno meeting France drafted treaties of alliance with Rumania and Yugoslavia. Following the drafting of the Locarno treaties these alliances were held up. Pertinax in the Echo de Paris today says the proper retort of France should be the immediate signing and ratification of these new alliances unless Germany signifies her intention to drop at once the negotiations with the Russians.

I recall that at Geneva last month Chancellor Luther was asked one day if Germany's joining the League would mean putting a distance between her and Russia. He replied that he did not see why matters should work out that way and that Germany hoped to remain on good terms with her neighbors both to the East and West. This would tend to confirm the report that negotiations between Berlin and Moscow have been under way for some months.

The Journal des Débats tonight warns the Government to be on guard against secret clauses in the proposed Russo-German treaty. It recalls that after the Triple Alliance, Bismarck, in 1884, made a reassurance treaty with Russia, and mentions that Dr. Stresemann has always tried to follow Bismarck's policies. It adds:

"We should watch that the policy of Locarno does not become a screen behind which shall be realized another Bismarckian program."

The Temps thinks that Russia will not get the sort of treaty she wants from Germany, but only an indefinite sort of arrangement similar to that Moscow made six months ago with Angora.

"If there is anything more than that," it says, "Germany can with difficulty jibe her policy toward Russia with her public declaration to conform with the spirit and letter of the Locarno treaties, and she cannot keep her engagements as a member of the League of Nations."

It is but natural that after M. Tchitcherin's bitter letter to Geneva refusing to take part in the disarmament meeting the news of Germany's getting together with Russia should have given rise to a certain amount of suspicion and doubt in England and France.

PERET TO COME HERE ON DEBT MISSION

French Finance Minister Plans Settlement Attempt After a Visit to London.

FRANC AT LOWEST POINT YET

Drops to 29.61 to Dollar in Paris Despite Favorable Bank of France Statement.

PARIS, April 15 (AP).—M. Peret, the French Minister of Finance, according to reliable information, has decided to cross the Atlantic and finish up the war debt settlement with the United States after the negotiations at London.

M. Peret will have a few weeks at his disposal in May and June while Parliament is adjourned, and persons close to him say he means to use them to get the inter-Allied debts finally off the docket.

The Finance Minister is convinced that nothing effective can be done toward stabilizing the franc until the debts are out of the way. The news from Washington regarding Ambassador Berenger's negotiations is said in official circles to be good, and there is much optimism as to the possibility of coming to an agreement.

Franc at New Low Record.

PARIS, April 15.—The New York attack on sterling is held responsible here for today's new low record of the franc, which closed at 29.61 despite the favorable Bank of France statement showing a reduction of 600,000,000 in bank advances to the State and of 407,000,000 in circulation. The pound was quoted 143.80. This situation is, however, regarded as exceptional and due to measures taken by London, Brussels and Rome in the international market to import their own value.

In the Senate today quiet progress was being made toward final adoption of the budget and in the immediate future no political or financial events was foreseen which would normally produce such a sudden drop in the franc. Today's publication of last month's import and export figures also is reassuring. While there is still a deficit in exports compared with imports, this deficit is less than it has been at any period in the past six months, the figures for March being imports, 5,095,000,370; exports, 4,960,000,316.

Ready Now for Debt Subscriptions.

Organization of a department of the Treasury for receipt of voluntary subscriptions toward reduction of the internal debt has now been practically concluded, M. Giraud being appointed Commissioner General.

While a considerable number of chambers of commerce and other public bodies have already decided to make handsome contributions, the general feeling toward this move is shown by the number of small donations which have already reached the Treasury. One student sent five gold coins and people of humble means have begun sending their tributes. More than 100,000 francs was received Tuesday and yesterday nearly the same amount.

PREMIER OF POLAND PAYS VIENNA A VISIT

SEEKS ARBITRATION TREATY

But Real Motive Is Said to Be to Get Austria to Mediate in the Berlin-Warsaw Deadlock.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, April 15.—Count Skrzynski, the Polish Premier, arrived here this morning on a two days' official visit, during which he will sign a new arbitration treaty with Austria and open negotiations for improving trade relations.

These treaties, however, seem convenient excuses for, rather than the real objects of the political negotiations now going on in the Ballhausplatz, where Count Skrzynski, as an official of the old Empire, got his first training in diplomacy. The real objects why Poland is cultivating the friendship of Little Austria, THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent learns from well informed Polish and Austrian sources, are double.

Through closer relations with Austria, Poland hopes to have Vienna become the intermediary between Warsaw and Berlin in settling the differencies between them. By thus showing the Austrians that their position, historically and geographically, allows them as an independent state to continue to play an important influential and political rôle in Central Europe, Poland hopes to discourage the Anschluss movement which would make Vienna merely another provincial German capital.

Seeks Meditation With Germans.

The impulse behind Count Skrzynski's visit in both regards, but especially in the latter, comes, the Poles unofficially admit, directly from Dr. Benes, the Czechoslovak foreign minister, and behind him from France. Both seem to realize that mere treaty prohibitions are insufficient to prevent Anschluss in the long run, and that Austria, to conserve her independence, must have both a reason for wanting to conserve it and the possibility of doing so more easily.

Poland's impasse with Germany helps to provide a reason.

Count Skrzynski, in knocking at the door of the Ballhausplatz, awakens not only personal memories but past glories. His colleagues of the old imperial régime have grown despondent waiting vainly for their revival. Tonight they smile to see the famous reception halls again ablaze with lights and thronged with diplomats gathered in Count Skrzynski's honor. It is pleasant after begging assistance from all the chancelleries of Europe to be themselves sought after now, to be told that they can still play a big international rôle. They are willing to be convinced that the force of circumstances which originally made Vienna are bound to revive her importance.

The arguments are powerful. Geographically Vienna is in the centre of a mixture of nations, German, Slav, Latin and Magyar. Historically the Viennese are the product of the intermingling of these peoples and are accustomed to holding the balance in the struggles among them. As part of Germany Austria would lose all these advantages and increase the fear of German expansion. As an independent State she is not feared by her neighbors, and Austria is preeminently fitted to mediate between them—perhaps to become the hub of a Central European "Locarno."

Offer Commerce in Return.

Such at least are the chords on which the Poles, Czechs and French are playing and the tunes are those which so long have pleased the ear of ex-Chancellor Seipel—always an influential figure in Austria.

In return for Austria's good offices the Czechs and Poles promise to improve the commercial relations with her, making economic existence easier. These promises are still very vague, especially those of the Pole, who admit they can do little at present, as they are deliberately closing their market so as to improve the currency by decreasing imports. The Czechs and French also aim to offset the growing influence of Italy at Warsaw by striving to help the Poles find a real peace with Germany through Austria.

The fact that Count Skrzynski follows their advice by coming to Vienna is hailed as a victory for their diplomacy.

The Poles declare that the visit has nothing to do with the question of a seat on the League Council, though obviously if the relations between Germany and Poland are improved it will affect that problem.

Stone Mountain Coins $2 on June 1.

The Stone Mountain Association, at a meeting held yesterday in Atlanta, decided that until June 1 the Stone Mountain Memorial half dollars will be sold in New York City for $1 each. The price in other parts of the country is $2, but the committee felt it would be unfair to raise the price here until the three months' period allotted for the quota had passed. This was done in other cities.

TREND IN RUMANIA TOWARD REVOLUTION

KING'S POLICY IS SUICIDAL

In view of the conflicting reports concerning the troublous political situation in Rumania, and its threatened repercussions in Southeastern Europe, THE NEW YORK TIMES recently sent a staff correspondent to Bucharest to ascertain the exact facts. The fifth and last of a series of articles from the correspondent follows:

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUCHAREST, April 3.—Carol's act in abdicating, especially in view of the circumstances leading to it, was dangerous enough for the Rumanian dynasty. Its acceptance by the King, the fact that he forced it on the country and the situation that was thus created are of much greater importance and are correspondingly more dangerous.

Whatever occult influences may have determined the King's decision, when the critical moment came he took direct responsibility in the plainest manner on his own shoulders. Nothing prevented and everything urged him to do his utmost to dissuade Carol or, at least, to consult the leaders of all parties before making up his own mind. He did neither the one nor the other to the extent the gravity of the question required.

He did not call the Crown Council of all the party leaders on Dec. 31 to get their advice, but to ratify his decision. The Opposition leaders, especially the Nationalists, say that they were taken completely by surprise, that they knew nothing of the abdication until they were summoned to approve it. The King saw them first separately and then in council. Three leaders who were present have told the story of the council to THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent. They agree on the essential point that the King forced the issue from the start, saying his decision was as irrevocable as Carol's and making opposition to his will disloyalty. In his private interview with the peasant leaders he even told them plainly they must either accept Carol's abdication or his own.

King Refuses Mediation.

The Liberals agreed. So did General Averescu, adding tactlessly that his Majesty should have accepted Carol's abdication the first time. The peasants said that since the King put the question in such terms, they could only assent and trust loyally to his judgment. The Nationalist leaders in the end took the same stand as the peasants, but first all three of them, Julius Maniu, Alexander Vaida-Voevod and Nicholas Jorga, attempted to dissuade the King or at least postpone a decision. The latter two offered to mediate with Carol, guaranteeing to make him withdraw his abdication. The King cut them short, saying, "It is impossible." They then agreed, Jorga, who is Rumania's greatest scholar, adding, however, "as an historian, I must warn your Majesty of the grave dangers to which a Regency exposes a kingdom."

It was all over before the political friends of Carol knew just what was happening. His renunciation of the Crown and of all his princely rights was accepted; he was forbidden to return to Rumania for ten years; his four-year-old son, Mihel, was proclaimed Crown Prince; and a Regency was named to rule, should he come to the throne a minor. The Regency is composed of Prince Nicholas, the King's second son, the Patriarch and the Chief Justice. Prince Nicholas is 23, with a reputation of being the champion Charleston dancer in Bucharest and of having no interest in politics. The Patriarch and the Chief Justice both owe their positions to the Liberals, and being life appointees cannot be removed by a change in government.

The Nationalists do not yet seem to realize quite what has happened. They appreciate, it is true, the Liberal complexion of the Regency, but they talk of restoring Carol.

Liberals Clear Eyed.

The peasants have a clearer idea of the situation, perhaps because they seek power neither through the favor of the King nor of the Crown Prince, but by organizing their followers in such a way that eventually they cannot be ignored. One of their leaders, Professor Stere, an authority on constitutional law, was consulted by the King in drawing up the law for Carol's abdication and the substitution of Prince Mihel. It is Professor Stere who points out that Carol cannot be legally restored.

For Carol to become Crown Prince again, his baby son must first abdicate that position. Until Prince Mihel reaches the age of 18, he cannot, being a minor, abdicate. Nor can any one abdicate for him. He can only, in the next fourteen years, be deprived forcefully of his rights. That is one of the dangers in the situation.

It is evident that the victory of the old régime is devastatingly complete. The small group of wealthy Liberals, after having secured to themselves by long term franchises all the springs of economic and financial power, have assured themselves similar control over the source of political power, the Crown. Carol, whose attitude threatened the basis of their position, is as removed as is humanly possible. He cannot return to Rumania for ten years, he cannot be restored legally in the fourteen years his successor remains a minor, and if the King dies within that period, the Liberals control the Regency, and thus the Crown. Secure in the knowledge that they control the master strings, the Liberals can now retire from the direct responsibility of governing, fortifying their position by disguising it. That is the step which they are now taking.

Situation Points to Trouble.

For all this, King Ferdinand, it has been shown, has made himself, step by step, directly responsible. Why he has done this is not clear. The common talk of Bucharest is that he drinks too much—and more than ever of late. Even so, his policy has so plainly been one of dynastic suicide as to be incomprehensible, especially in a country whose stability depends upon the dynasty. Deliberately or unconsciously, he has now produced a situation which points unerringly toward trouble.

Consider all the possibilities. Ferdinand may live for years; he may die tomorrow. While he lives, he may either continue his present policy of favoring the old régime, or he may change it radically in favor of the new elements in his kingdom. In the former event, he is courting sure disaster. He will further diminish the prestige of the Crown, which has been going down crescendo, especially since the King, in forcing the acceptance of Carol's abdication, broke the last bond attaching the Opposition to his dynasty. By so doing he has already given Carol a popularity he did not previously enjoy, by continuing to side with his enemies he will make him appear more and more dangerously a martyr.

The new elements in Rumania cannot be forever bottled up by the old régime. They are too vital, too strong. They are already making themselves felt. The victory of the Opposition in the two recent elections for rural and for municipal councils shows that governmental pressure and the old methods of fraud and corruption while they can still restrain, can no longer be counted on to nullify completely the effects of universal suffrage.

The new territories cannot be expected to submit indefinitely to the rule of the old kingdom, whose culture they consider inferior to their own. The population of the new territories is 40 per cent. more than that of the old kingdom. It is not only solid against the old régime but it has the support of all the opposition in the old kingdom itself.

The only way in which these new factors can be restrained in favor of a minority is through the continued arbitrary exercise of power by the King. The longer that lasts, the more violent the break will be when it comes.

Talk of King's Repentance.

The King, however, may change his policy. It is said that he now repents his hastiness in accepting Carol's abdication, that he is beginning to realize the true situation in which he has placed the monarchy and the country. There is nothing to prove this—and his appointment of General Averescu to succeded Bratiano goes far to disprove it. But even if he swings all his power in favor of the Opposition, there will be trouble. The Opposition, if it gains control of the Government, is bound to attempt to overthrow the financial-economic machine the Liberals have built up. The Liberals will not let that machine be destroyed or seriously impaired without a struggle. The Crown Prince who attacked it is no longer Crown Prince. The King, if he attacked the invisible Government of Rumania might well have a similar fate.

If the King dies, the situation becomes immediately much more serious. The Opposition is in no mood to accept the rule of a Regency, directly and openly controlled by the old régime. Everything indicates that such a contingency would lead to the violent restoration of Carol or the establishment of a republic, though either might be preceded by a military dictatorship under Bratiano or one of his Liberal lieutenants.

There is no organized Republican movement in Rumania. Even the leaders who admire Republican institutions think the country is too immature for them. Among them, for instance, is Dr. Lupu, one of the peasant leaders, although he has his shelves filled with such authors as Sinclair Lewis, Walter Lippmann and Eugene O'Neill (he has been to America twice) and has enshrined in his bedroom office the pictures of Abraham Lincoln, not that of the King.

Driving Toward Revolution.

But there is much latent Republican sentiment, especially among the Transylvanians, many of whom have lived in America as emigrants, and among the Bessarabians who are exposed to Russian influence. This sentiment has grown since the abdication of Carol. One frequently hears such statements as, "We don't want a republic, but rather than a Regency we prefer a President." It is easy to conceive of a train of events which would make this latent republicanism a decisive factor.

Indeed, King Ferdinand has already started that train of events and has been driving it straight toward revolution. The question is whether it can still be stopped or sidetracked. It is doubtful if it can be. It is more doubtful if it will be.

The impending changes may not be accompanied with great violence, for the Rumanians, happily, are easy-going, long-suffering and not inclined to bloodshed. The movement will probably begin in a palace revolution which will restore Carol. If Carol is a much wiser King than his father, it may stop there and the inevitable shift in the centre of political and economic power away from the old régime to the new elements in Rumanian life may be worked out peacefully. But there is no reason to be confident that he possesses the qualities of statesmanship which the situation demands.

Peasants Strongest Party.

The party and class most likely to benefit in the long run from the internal troubles with which Ferdinand and Bratiano have threatened the country are the Peasants. They have the strongest popular organization and they represent the Left. They have in one of their leaders Professor Stere, a man different in calibre and personality from most Rumanian politicians. The Liberals consider him a "dangerous man." But as he is the boss of Bessarabia they have had to handle him with gloves.

He is not one of the many who cannot see the forest for the trees. He is a far-sighted man who knows what he wants.

As one of the constitutional authorities framing the law covering Carol's abdication, he is keenly aware of its peculiarly irrevocable character. He is the kind of man to foresee that the great error of Bratiano was to go too far, to endanger his very source of power by committing the King too openly to his side, to make his mastery of the Crown, as of the country's finances and natural wealth, so glaringly complete through the rigidity of this law and the composition of the Regency, that no legal outlet being left, internal troubles were bound to ensue—and that when such troubles begin, control tends to drift to the Extreme Left. In any such shift to the Left, Stere is the kind of man to emerge eventually at the helm.

It is not meant that he, or the Peasants, are planning revolution. I doubt if any one is seriously planning revolution at present in Rumania. The point is that revolution has been and is being unconsciously prepared by the King and Bratiano to the profit of the Peasants. To jail Stere or other Peasant leaders would only help them.

The problem in Rumania is not one of men, or of women, or of scandal. It is to prevent the irresistible new forces in the country from smashing violently into the immovable mass which the old régime has erected in their path in the last four years.

The gravest dangers in the situation are not the downfall of the dynasty and the serious internal troubles to which the basic conflict makes Rumania liable whether under a King, a Regency or a President. They are the disruption of the newly formed kingdom, the opportunity which internal division and weakness gives neighboring powers.

Danger of Internal Dissensions.

King Ferdinand has saddled on his new territories a government by the ruling class of the old kingdom which the Rumanians there find worse than the previous rule of aliens. One of the most responsible and patriotic leaders of the Rumanian Transylvanians so despairs of the situation that he seriously asked me if America would take a mandate for the country. Said a Rumanian Bessarabian:

"How can Russia be expected to recognize Rumanian rule in Bessarabia, when Bucharest is doing everything possible to estrange even the Rumanians of that province?"

It should not be concluded that the new Rumanians want to break away from the old kingdom. The one thing most likely to make them forget their criticisms of the old régime would be the threat of foreign domination. But their discontent is significant. That it is shared in stronger measure by the Hungarians, Germans, Russians and other alien minorities, whose sentimental attachment is not to Bucharest, goes without saying.

Add to this the attitude of Rumania's neighbors and the situation becomes disquieting. Yugoslavia thinks she should have received the Banat. Nowhere do the Hungarians apply their slogan, "No! no! never!" more emphatically than to the loss of Transylvania, the home of their Premier, Count Bethlen. Russia is such an open, standing threat to Bessarabia that two Rumanian Army Corps are concentrated on that frontier. What is more, there is no country whose power of military resistance, at best, is so dispised by all these powers as that of Rumania.

Through internal dissensions over the Crown, the Rumanian principalities—there was never in history a united Rumania such as today—lost their independence to the Turks. It would not seem that Greater Rumania is in so strong a position as to indulge in such luxuries now.

KEEP HEAVY GUARD ON RADIO BURGLAR

HILTON ADDS TO CONFESSION

Tells How He Escaped From Brig In Newport After Theft—Says He Got Only $170 From Robberies.

Unusual precautions to prevent escape will be taken by the police today when Paul Hilton, the "radio burglar," is arraigned before County Judge Adel in Jamaica, Queens, for the fatal shooting of Patrolman Arthur Kenny on the night of March 25 last, when Kenny intercepted the prisoner in Richmond Hill. Hilton is to be arraigned in the old Jamaica Town Hall, and Captain Henry McQueeney of the Jamaica Station said he had planned to have a cordon of detectives and uniformed patrolmen around the building.

Patrolmen would be stationed, he said, at the main and side entrances to the building, and each door and window of the courtroom would be guarded by other patrolmen, while detectives and uniformed men would be stationed inside. The Captain also revealed that mechanics from the Police Department yesterday forenoon examined the prisoners' pen in the court to make certain that Hilton would have no chance to escape, and, he added, instructions had been given to the detectives who were to arraign the prisoner not to leave his side for a moment.

Hilton amplified his previous confession to Inspector Coughlin, head of the Detective Division, when he was questioned yesterday by Assistant District Attorneys Dayton, Conroy and Wolff of Queens. The prisoner appeared to be in a jovial mood and revealed that he was more intelligent than his phlegmatic attitude at Police Headquarters indicated.

"My only dissipation is cigarette smoking," Hilton said to his questioners. "I'm not interested in women, liquor, coffee or pie. They would interfere with my training."

When one of the prosecutors commented on his use of good English Hilton answered rather boastfully: "When I was in Elmira Reformatory we had to attain a scholastic standing of 75 per cent. or draw an additional thirty-day stay in the institution. I passed every term. I did get an extra thirty days once, but that came about through my being caught smoking a cigarette."

Hilton then told of serving a brief enlistment in the navy in 1918, and his escape from the brig in Newport, R. I., after he had been caught stealing a jumper from a tailoring establishment near the navy yard there. He stepped unobserved out of a line of prisoners on their way to mess, hid near by and got away after borrowing $3 from another seaman, he declared. The prisoner said he had two brothers living, but he had not been in communication with them for more than nine years. He added that he had an uncle living in New Jersey, whose address he did not know.

"I had no particular reason for selecting Queens as the scene of my many burglaries," Hilton was reported to have said. "I could just as easily have committed robberies anywhere else where there were small, detached wooden houses, which are the easiest to rob. My only equipment was a .38-calibre pistol, a cold chisel and a block of wood. I used the chisel and the block of wood to force open doors leading to cellars.

"I took only radios, because they were more readily disposed of. All I got for those that I stole was $170. I had $15 in my pockets when I skipped to Providence, after seeing a picture of Detective McCarthy in a newspaper on the day I shot him. I thought it about time to get out of town and lay low."

DENY CHARGE IN KENNY DEATH

Following a complaint made to Assistant District Attorney Charles Sullivan of Queens that Patrolman Arthur Kenny, who died in the Post Graduate Hospital from the effect of a bullet wound inflicted by Paul E. Hilton, the radio burglar, did not receive proper attention while he was a patient in the Mary Immaculate Hospital at Jamaica, the Board of Managers of the hospital issued yesterday the following statement, through the Rev. Thomas A. Nummey, Chairman of the board:

"The Board of Managers of the Mary Immaculate Hospital, Jamaica, after a thorough investigation of the charges made against the institution by an alleged 'social worker,' claiming affiliation with the Police Department, of the treatment received by Policeman Kenny at our hospital, deny emphatically and specifically every charge made. These charges were first made a week ago and the management of the hospital called upon Police Commissioner McLaughlin, to make an independent investigation of them. After consultation with the two surgeons of the Police Department, who had supervision of the case from the date of admission, the Commissioner issued a statement that as far as the Police Department was concerned it had no complaint to make; that it felt that every thing possible had been done at our institution for Policeman Kenny and that the woman making the charges had no connection with the department in any way and hence had no authority to speak for the department.

"This case, at our institution, was in the care of Drs. Dealy, Meynen and Scannell. The reputations of these physicians alone should indicate the character of service rendered. Dr. Frank Jennings of Brooklyn also was called in for consultation by the police surgeon. He reported that the patient was receiving the best of treatment.

"At this time the management desires to call attention of the public to the fact that vicious methods are constantly being used to slander the institution. Several of the newspapers have recently received anonymous communications attacking the management. The management feels under the circumstances that some group of individuals is bent upon slandering the institution for their own selfish purposes. Prompt action will be taken by the management upon the discovery of their connection with these attacks."

SHOOTS TWO AND HIMSELF.

Tony Pazalla, 26 years old, of 218 Cherry Street, died yesterday in the Gouverneur Hospital from a self-inflicted wound in his left eye. He was shot in a struggle for a pistol in the home of his step sister at 60 Rutgers Street. The woman, Minnie Vaspora, 25 years old, was also shot and is in the Gouverneur Hospital in a serious condition with a bullet in her groin. Philaminia, another step sister, was slightly wounded.

Pazalla, who is married and has four children, went to his step sister's house to try to persuade Philaminia to return to his house and live with him and his wife. Philaminia had previously lived at the Pazalla home.

According to Philaminia, Pazalla tried to shoot her. She grabbed the pistol and it was discharged, wounding her in the finger. Pazalla then shot at Minnie and turned the weapon on himself.

Dr. Stirling Reaches Amboyna.

AMBOYNA, Dutch Indies, April 15 (AP).—The expedition headed by Professor Matthew Stirling of Berkeley, Cal., which is to explore Dutch New Guinea, arived today. The airplane of the expedition was slightly damaged on the voyage. A waterspout, preceded by an electrical storm hit the Fomalhout Wednesday and badly buffeted her. The rough weather broke the ropes lashing the aircraft.

SAYS 53D ST. TUBE IS GREATLY NEEDED

CALLS OBJECTION INVALID

Walker Confers With Transit Board on Lengthening Local Platforms —Decision Is Expected Soon.

Robert W. Higbie, Chairman of the Transit Committee of the Queensboro Chamber of Commerce, said yesterday that the withdrawal of objection by the meeting of representatives of commercial organizations called by the Merchants' Association against the construction of new subways, so long as they met the principle of unification of operation, had removed all doubt of the necessity and desirability of proceeding with the construction of the Fifty-third Street subway.

The contracts for the line on Eighth Avenue have been let through a great portion of its length," Mr. Higbie said. "It was therefore unthinkable that at this late hour any valid objection could be made to the letting of contracts through Fifty-third Street, which route was adopted simultaneously with the Eighth Avenue section. As Chairman of the Transit Committee of the Queensboro Chamber of Commerce, I am gratified that the Merchants' Association has withdrawn its objection to that portion of the route.

Sees Line as Link in Queens.

"The construction of the Fifty-third Street line in Manhattan through Long Island City and out Queens Boulevard to Jamaica will provide the only rapid transit connections between the northerly and southerly sides of the Borough of Queens. The relief which will be provided for the Long Island Railroad will contribute greatly to the increased development of the borough. The residential, commercial and industrial development, which will follow the construction of this line, will bring to the city many dollars of increased taxes annually and the increased valuation of this property will contribute materially toward increasing the borrowing capacity of the city for further rapid transit extensions."

Construction of an extension of the Nostrand Avenue subway from Flatbush Avenue to Emmons Avenue, a distance of three miles, was asked yesterday by the New Flatbush-Harkness Estate Property Owners' Association in a letter to the Board of Estimate, signed by William H. Saul, First Vice President. Mr. Saul declared that construction of this subway would not cost any thing, as assessed valuations would increase $48,156,000 because of its construction, thus giving the city additional borrowing capacity, and the increase in taxes on these higher property valuations would amount to $1,300,000 annually.

Walker Holds Conference.

Mayor Walker had another conference yesterday with the members of the Transit Commission and the Board of Transportation in regard to the proposed lengthening of the Interborough subway local station platforms and the method to be used in financing the improvement if it is ordered. Under the terms of the Interborough's contract with the city, as interpreted by the officials, the Interborough must pay half the cost of construction and all the cost of new equipment, estimated by the company to amount to about $20,000,000.

No definite decision was reached by the conference, but the Transit Commission is expected to make a decision in a few days. The terms of the three Transit Commissioners will expire today, but they will continue in office until Governor Smith appoints their successors, which is expected to be next week.

The Association of Engineers of New York has appointed Raphael Smyth, Thomas O'Dowd and W. L. Arctander a committee to call on the Governor and request him to appoint an engineer on the new commission.

PRAISES PURE FOOD LAWS.

Market Head Says New York State Protection Is Best in Country.

The New York State pure food laws provide better protection to the public and to honest producers than those of any other State in the Union, Berne A. Pyrke, Commissioner of the Department of Farms and Markets of New York State, said in an address yesterday at the closing session of the New York Wholesale Grocers' Association at the Hotel Pennsylvania. The stringent enforcement of these laws, he said, had brought about marked improvement in foodstuffs not only among domestic manufacturers but at foreign sources as well. The recent legislation compelling the denaturization or destruction of unwholesome foodstuffs, said Commissioner Pyrke, afforded added protection to the public, since it prevented impure foods from reaching the consumer. Heretofore, he pointed out, penalizing the producer was the only recourse of the State, which was in many instances unable to prevent the sale of such impure commodities.

WANDERS, WEAK AND DAZED.

Auto Mechanic Found in Elmhurst —Says He Did Not Eat for 10 Days.

Thomas Wright, 42 years old, who said he had no home, was found dazed, wandering on the street of Elmhurst by Patrolman Lovell of the Flushing precinct. At the Flushing Station House he collapsed while being questioned. Dr. Roseborough of the Flushing Hospital revived him and said the man was suffering from malnutrition. Wright himself said that he had not eaten for ten days. Policemen at the Flushing Station bought soup and coffee for him. Later he was taken to the Kings County Hospital.

Wright could give little information concerning the last few days. He said that he had come to New York looking for work and that he had been unable to find employment. His money was stolen, he said, shortly after he came to the city and, as he had no friends, he was forced to roam the streets and sleep in parks. He said that he knew there were organizations in the city which would have aided him, but that he had hesitated about applying to them because he had never done so before.

Wright declared he had last been employed as an automobile mechanic in Boston and had originally set out to go to Florida.

BROKER IS KILLED IN FALL FROM ROOF

H. M. Vickers Is Found Dead in Courtyard Several Hours After Seven-Floor Plunge.

HEALTH POOR, HAD LOSSES

Family and Friends Say He Was in Good Spirits—"Either Fell or Jumped," Is Police Record.

H. Montague Vickers, a broker, of 49 Wall Street, who was General Administrative and Personnel Officer of the British War Mission in this country during the war, left his bed in his apartment on the fifth floor at 127 West Fifty-eighth Street, soon after midnight yesterday, put on a dressing gown, over his pajamas, and a pair of black oxford shoes, and, it is believed, climbed two stories to the roof. At 8 o'clock in the morning his body was found in the courtyard. He had been dead several hours.

No note was left to indicate that he had intended to commit suicide. So far as his business associates, his wife, his sister-in-law, Miss Caroline Herrick of 152 West Fifty-seventh Street, or his nephew, W. H. Vickers, who had spent the previous evening with him, knew, he had no enemies who might have desired to do him violence.

His health had been poor and it was reported he had suffered financial loss in the recent turbulent market. Police of the West Forty-seventh Street station, who recorded that he "either fell or jumped," suggested that his physical condition and losses might have preyed upon his nerves to make him despondent.

Spent Evening at Home.

Mr. Vickers, however, appeared to be in the best of spirits, according to his friends. As was his frequent custom he dined the evening before at the Century Club, of which he was a member. Returning to his apartment at 8:30 he spent the night until 10 o'clock in conversation with his wife, Miss Herrick and his nephew, who recently returned from Canada. It was recalled by the nephew that one of Mr. Vicker's last remarks before retiring at 10 o'clock was to the effect that it would be a great adventure to go to Canada and join the gold rush. His sister-in-law and nephew stayed at the apartment for the night.

The doorbell rang at 8 o'clock in the morning. Miss Herrick answered it. It was the superintendent of the building. "Is everybody all right in here?" he asked.

Miss Herrick said his manner alarmed her, and she replied, nervously, "Why, what do you mean?"

Finally she went through the apartment. Mr. Vickers's bed had been slept in, but the room was empty. The window was shut, she said.

The superintendent, who, after discovering the body, had called a policeman, asked Miss Herrick to accompany him to the courtyard, where she identified her brother-in-law. In his fall he had broken an aerial wire at the fifth floor level. Other tenants said that during the night they heard a cry followed by a thud, but had not made an investigation.

Resigned Army Commission.

Mr. Vickers was a British subject and was 57 years old. After attending Woolwich Military Academy he was commissioned in the Royal Infantry and was assigned to Bermuda, where he met Miss Isabelle Herrick, a New York girl, there on a vacation. He resigned his commission, married her, came to New York and entered the bond business. He was a partner in the firm of Vickers & Phelps, which dissolved in 1917. About that time Mr. Vickers, although nearly fifty years old, enlisted in the New York National Guard as a private.

Shortly after the United States entered the war he obtained an appointment to the British War Mission and was honorably discharged from the militia. Of his work as administrative officer of the mission, Brig. Gen. L. R. Kenyon wrote, "Your local knowledge of individuals, firms and methods has over and over again been very useful."

Funeral services will be held at 11 o'clock tomorrow at Woodlawn Cemetery Chapel.

Artist Associates Chosen.

The Council of the National Academy of Design, 109th Street and Amsterdam Avenue, announced yesterday the election of fourteen artists as associates of the academy. The new associates are William Auerbach-Levy, etcher and painter; Hilda Belcher, Oscar E. Berninghaus, Harvey W. Corbett, architect; Barry Faulkner, Abbott Graves, Armin Hansen, Eric Hudson, Wilson Irvine, Frederick J. Mulhaupt, Allen G. Newman, Albin Polasek, sculptor; Allen Emmet Rand and Julius Rolshaven.

Actress Regains Citizenship.

Elsie Bartlett Schildkraut, an actress who lost her citizenship in 1922 by marrying Joseph Schildkraut, a Rumanian actor, became an American citizen again yesterday when Federal Judge Mack granted her application without questioning her. She said she was going to join her husband, who is on the Pacific Coast taking part in the production of a motion picture.

LOS ANGELES JURY SEES O'NEILL PLAY

'Desire Under the Elms' Cast Put Under Oath for Special Performance.

Special to The New York Times.

LOS ANGELES, April 15.—The jury in the "Desire Under the Elms" case witnessed a special matinee performance of the play this afternoon at the Orange Grove Theatre, after a morning of testimony. The play was presented in the form it was given the night the seventeen players of the cast were arrested. Judge, bailiff, witnesses and policemen attended. The members of the cast were put under oath before the play began.

Mrs. Helen Thurston, Chairman of the Dramatic Committee of the Friday Morning Club, was the star witness of the day. She called the play one of the best she had ever seen and said it was a "marvelous presentation of certain phases of life," and that it had a great moral lesson. At its conclusion, she said, the audience was so tense she believed if some one had said, "Let us pray," the hearers would have dropped to their knees and considered it a fitting ending.

"I was more shocked by the table manners of the characters in the play than by what they said," testified Mrs Thurston. "You might say there was a double performance at the theatre the night I saw 'Desire Under the Elms.' One performance was on the stage and the other in and by the audience. At first the audience giggled and tittered and was obviously reacting to what some believed were risque speeches by the actors. Then, toward the end of the play, when the profound moral lesson is taught, I believe that most of the members of the audience felt like falling on their knees and praying.

"As far as the language of the characters is concerned I was far more shocked by their table manners than by what they said."

Judge Frederickson denied a motion by the defense to have the play read line by line from the witness stand.

"I don't want to sit here and listen to it," he declared.

SAYS CODDLED CONVICT FINDS PRISON ALLURING

Civitan Club Report Declares the Inmates Get More Amusement Than Honest Laboring Man.

Convicts are being coddled to such an extent that prisons are becoming alluring to criminals, according to a report by the Crime Committee of the Civitan Club, read at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor yesterday. W. G. Streit, Vice President of the New York Railways Corporation, is Chairman of the committee.

"There is no justification for the barbarities of some prisons of a generation or two ago," the report said, "but we are all susceptible to extremes. We have now made our prisons so comfortable and cater to the inmates' wants to such an extent that we have developed a large class of people who have definitely decided to take their chances on a short term in prison in preference to going to work and earning an honest living.

"The honest but untrained laboring man can afford fewer amusements and diversions than are offered free of charge to the intercepted criminal."

Attorney General Albert Ottinger, the chief speaker at the luncheon, recounted the accomplishments of his administration, saying that his campaign against bucket shops had saved the people of the State $200,000,000. He advocated further utilization of the State's water power resources.

Others who spoke briefly were William D. Guthrie, President of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, and Samuel S. Koenig, Chairman of the County Republican Committee. George W. Ochs Oakes presided.

Prisoner's Writ Balks Sheriff.

Supreme Court Justice Mahoney will hear arguments next Monday on a writ of habeas corpus obtained last Wednesday afternoon by Alexander Karlin to prevent his client, Albert Rosenthal, or Rosen, of 504 West 110th Street, from being taken back to St. Petersburg, Fla., to face a charge of having defrauded the First National Bank there through a worthless check. The writ had been served on the St. Petersburg sheriff before he could leave this city with his prisoner.

CITY BREVITIES.

In memory of the late Dr. Gustav Gotthell, rabbi of the Temple Emanu-El, Dr. H. G. Enelow will preach at the temple tomorrow on "What Are Rabbis For?" At the Sunday morning service Dr. Nathan Krass will speak on "Feminism."

Under the auspices of the American Committee for Relief and Education of Russian Refugee Children in European Countries, Vladimir Nelidoff, former director of the Moscow Dramatic Imperial Theatre, will lecture on "The Twentieth Century American" at the home of Mme. B. de Petschenko, 31 Riverside Drive, Sunday, at 8:30 P. M. The proceeds will go to the fund of the Russian orphans.

Mrs. Ethel Puffer Howes, director of the Institute for the Coordination of Women's Interests, Smith College, will speak on "Our Mental Budget" before the Child Education Foundation, 866 West End Avenue, at 8:15 o'clock tonight.

A dinner dance will be given by the Medical Detachment, Seventh Regiment, N. Y. N. G., tonight at the armory, Sixty-sixth Street and Park Avenue.

Ground for the new $35,000 Evangelical Lutheran Church of the Redeemer, at Cooper and Fosdick Avenues, Glendale, Queens, will be broken Sunday afternoon, at 3:30 o'clock. Addresses will be made by the Rev. F. E. Tilly of St. Jacobus Church, Winfield, and the Rev. Walter Hirsun, pastor of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Brooklyn.

The annual dinner of the Brooklyn Sunday School Union was held last night at the Hotel St. George, Brooklyn. President Charles A. Ditmas was toastmaster. About 750 members and their friends were present.

MISS WURTS-DUNDAS IS ROBBED OF GEMS

case and a description of the jewelry was forwarded to pawnbrokers and second-hand jewelry stores. Up to last night nothing had been learned, however, to throw light on the whereabouts of the jewelry or the identity of the window cleaner. No references had been obtained from him when he sought employment and no check-up had been made when he gave his name and address. The police have often stressed the danger of this, especially in the case of workmen who enter the homes of wealthy persons and are not constantly watched. The company that sent the man has space in a bakery and the proprietor yesterday expressed ignorance of the case.

Miss Wurts-Dundas refused to discuss the case and would not see callers. Miss Green said no definite estimate of the value of the gems could be made, but agreed that $40,000 was an approximate. She said that Miss Wurts-Dundas, who is Chairman of the Debutantes' Committee of the International Migration Service Spring ball, will attend that affair this evening at the Ritz-Carlton, despite the incident.

Miss Wurts-Dundas was introduced to society last year by Mrs. Charles Edward Tracey of Philadelphia. She is the daughter of the late Ralph H. Wurts-Dundas, who died in 1921 at Gloucester, Mass., leaving most of his great estate to his daughter and the residue to his widow. The value of her property has been estimated at $40,000,000. Just before her début she obtained a decision from the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania granting to her $70,000 a year from the estate of her granduncle, J. Dundas Lippincott.

In 1922, her mother, Mrs. Josephine H. Wurts-Dundas, was declared incompetent and Josiah Harman, committee of her property, was ordered to dispose of her personal effects. Her daughter pleaded to be allowed to purchase them, and in January, 1925, Supreme Court Justice Proskauer granted her request. She paid the appraised value, $10,093. In her affidavit to the court at that time, Miss Wurts-Dundas said:

"The articles of personal property referred to are for the most part family belongings having a sentimental value to my mother and to me because of their association quite apart from their mere intrisic worth. I am able and willing to buy them, whereas, if she should learn of their sale to strangers, and if they are sold she can hardly fail to hear of it, the knowledge would hurt her cruelly. If they are sold to me it will be my pleasure to keep them for her use and comfort should she need and ask for them."

Mrs. Wurts-Dundas is in a sanatorium at Riverdale, and it is believed that some of the jewelry stolen on Wednesday was formerly her property.

$15,000,000 PAY RISE FOR TEACHERS OUT

Assembly Rules Committee Reports Measure, Urged by Lobby, for Vote.

RETIREMENT BILL VETOED

Governor Signs Seven of Reorganization Provisions — Assemblymen Cut Own Proposed Salary Increase.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 15.—A teachers' pay increase bill, whose estimated cost to New York City would be $15,000,000, sponsored by Assemblyman Ricca, Republican, of Kings, was reported today by the Assembly Rules Committee. The measure will be on the calendar for final action on Monday night.

Last year a similar measure was passed in the closing hours of the session, but was vetoed by Governor Smith because of objection made to it by New York City officials. There is doubt that the bill will be passed this year by both houses, although it may go through the Assembly.

Since early in the session, a school teachers' lobby has been working hard for the passage of the Ricca bill. The teachers feel certain it will be passed by both houses, but they are not overconfident of what will happen to it after it reaches Governor Smith's desk.

Signs Reorganization Bills.

Seven bills recommended by the Hughes Commission and providing for reorganization of the State Government were approved today by the Governor. He already has approved the measure which creates eighteen main departments into which 180 present bureaus and agencies will be consolidated.

All of the reorganization measures recommended by the Hughes Commission have now been introduced. The few that have not been acted on will be passed in both houses early next week. The Rules Committee of the Senate today reported those dealing with the Executive budget, Conservation Department, Department of Correction, Department of Audit and Control and the Department of Taxation and Finance.

The bills approved by the Governor provide for the Department of Law, Department of Public Works, Department of Public Service, Department of Health, Banking Department, Insurance Department and Civil Service Department. Few, if any, changes are called for in any of these departments under the recommendations of the commission.

The Senate Rules Committee also reported the bill by Assemblyman Sargeant, Republican, of Syracuse, which would permit savings banks to invest in electric light and gas securities. This has been passed in the Assembly and, it is believed, will be approved by the upper house.

Both houses held brief sessoins today despite the fact that final adjournment is only a week way. The Assembly Republicans defeated a motion by Assemblyman Mandlebaum, Republican, of Manhattan, to have the Rules Committee report his resolution asking Congress to change the present immigration law so that relatives of immigrants in this country can be admitted.

Amend Salary Increase Bill.

A resolution offered by Assemblyman Hutchinson, Republican, proposing an amendment to the Constitution to increase the salary of the Governor from $10,000 to $25,000, that of the Lieutenant Governor from $5,000 to $10,000 and fixing the salaries of members of the Legislature at $3,000, twice the amount they now receive, was debated. Assemblyman Jenks of Broome and Lord of Chenango, Republicans, thought $2,500 was sufficient. Assemblyman Hutchinson consented to amend his proposal by fixing the salary of the laymakers at that figure.

Maybe if we prove to the people that we are worth more than $1,500 a year they will vote to raise our salaries," said Mr. Hackenburg. "Personally, I think we are being paid about all we are worth to the people."

"If you don't think you are worth more than $1,500 a year to the people of the State in this body then you ought to resign," retorted Mr. Cuvillier.

Would Make Adler Judge.

A resolution offered by Mr. Cuvillier, petitioning Congress to pass a bill providing for a new Federal court district in Western New York and suggesting Assemblyman Simon L. Adler, the Republican floor leader, for the post of Judge of the new district, caused Mr. Adler no little embarrassment. After both Assemblyman Cuvillier and Assemblyman Hioch, the Democratic leader, had paid high tribute to Mr. Adler, the Republican leader moved that the resolution be referred to the Rules Committee.

"This is an embarrassing situation for me," he said. "I appreciate the kind things that have been said here about me, but I think the resolution ought to go to the Rules Committee, where it can be carefully considered."

Persons who commit felonies while armed with a dangerous weapon could be sent to prison for ten years instead of five, as at present, under a bill passed by the Senate. The measure was recommended by the Baumes Commission to curb crime. The upper house also passed a bill sponsored by Assemblyman Goodrich, Republican, of Westchester, which would prohibit commutation of life sentences. This measure now goes to the Governor.

The Senate passed another bill recommended by the Baumes Commission which provides that all facts in connection with the granting of pardons and reprieves must be made public. A majority of the twenty-two anti-crime measures urged by the Baumes Commission have now been passed in both houses.

A bill offered by Assemblyman Buckley, Democrat, of Manhattan, providing for an elevated motor express route from Canal Street to Seventy-second Street on the west side of New York, was passed in the Upper House and now goes to the Governor.

The Senate also adopted a bill already approved by the Assembly, increasing the salaries of judges of the Court of Claims from $8,000 to $10,000 a year.

Vetoes Teachers' Retirement Bill.

Governor Smith vetoed a bill by Assemblyman Fay, Republican, of Manhattan, relating to the retirement of New York City school teachers. The Governor said that the corporation counsel told him that the measure would favor a few teachers near the retirement period at the expense of many who had many years to teach before they could be retired.

"The time has arrived when the actuarial soundness of our pension funds should be taken into consideration," the Governor wrote in the veto memorandum. "Too many amendments have been made from time to time, designed to take care of certain groups."

The Governor also vetoed a bill sponsored by Senator Westall, Republican, of Westchester, which would have permitted the Commissioner of Jurors of that county to excuse liable jurors from service.

"At the present time," the Governor wrote in his memorandum, "there are all together too many exemptions from jury duty, and to give, without limit, power to an administrative officer to extend excuses to those liable is to narrow entirely too much the list from which liable jurors may be procured. If a juror has a reasonable excuse for temporary exemption it should be made to the Judge and relief should come from him."

The Governor vetoed a bill by Assemblyman Evans, Democrat, of Manhattan, which would permit an attorney to become a notary public by signing his name in the County Clerk's office and paying a fee of 25 cents.

"No good reason has been given to me why a lawyer should be permitted to act as a notary public upon the payment of a fee of 25 cents, when in the County of New York all other citizens pay a fee of $10 and in other counties of the State it is regulated from that down to $5 and $3.30," the Governor wrote.

Senator Wales, Republican, of Broome, sponsor of a bill which would have the State license chiropractors, has amended his measure so as to provide that the licensing board shall be composed entirely of members of that profession. A similar bill, offered by Assemblyman Esmond, Republican, of Saratoga, was defeated in the Assembly this week.

GARLAND SENTENCED TO 60 DAYS IN JAIL

Allentown Judge Also Fines Him $500 for His Plea in the Adultery Case.

Special to The New York Times.

ALLENTOWN, Pa., April 15.—Charles Garland of Boston, who surprised the country some years ago by refusing an inheritance of several hundred thousand dollars, maintained his reputation here today when he appeared before Judge Reno in the Lehigh County Court and entered a plea of nolo contendere, rather than stand trial on a charge of adultery as the result of the birth of a daughter to Bettina Hovey, a member of April Farm, a colony set up two years ago on a 200-acre farm in the lower end of Lehigh County. The child died of suffocation when it was three months old.

Garland's plea was a surprise. Appearing with his attorneys, David R. Wallerstein of Philadelphia, and L. H. Rupp of this city, immediately after the opening of the afternoon session of court, Garland, wearing the same shabby topcoat that he wore on the day of his arrest in January, gave not the slightest evidence of nervousness and appeared reconciled to whatever might happen.

"We have come to enter a nolo contendere in the case against Charles Garland. There has been a reconciliation between Garland and his wife," Rupp said.

"Then," said Judge Reno, "the Court will impose the usual sentence in cases of this kind—sixty days in the county prison, $500 fine and the costs."

Garland, evidently, had not expected to be sent to prison, for as the sentence was pronounced he was slightly shaken as if with a jar. Garland was then locked up.

What will become of April Farm during the founder's absence is uncertain, but it is quite probable that the work, especially that of fruit growing, which is being scientifically done, will be carried on by another member of the colony. It is said that all the women have deserted the colony.

The League of Nations Non-Partisan Association announced yesterday that a trip to Europe, with all expenses paid, would be the first prize in a competitive examination among high school students throughout the country, based on information contained in a pamphlet published by the Secretariat of the League called "Survey of the League of Nations." The second prize will be $100 and the third prize $50.

The awards have been made possible, according to the announcement, through a donation of $1,000 by a member of the association. The examination will be held on May 7 in various parts of the country. Rules and texts are being sent to school authorities throughout the country with the request that local high school teachers supervise the examination in each locality.

GIRL, ONCE WELL-TO-DO, IS JAILED FOR FORGERY

Declares 'World Owes Me Living' —Defrauded Many Stores on Bad Checks, Detectives Say.

Ruth Holl, 23 years old, who said she was a secretary and lived at 108 West Seventy-second Street, was committed to Bedford Reformatory for Women on her plea of guilty yesterday before Judge Koenig in General Sessions to presenting a forged check on March 4 last when she purchased a fur coat in a store at 2,251 Broadway. The girl flashed defiance at Judge Koenig and declared the "world owes me a living" when the Court told her that investigation of her career revealed that she was "no better than an ordinary crook."

Miss Mabel Sprague, a probation officer, had reported to Judge Koenig that the prisoner was the daughter of well-to-do parents in Hempstead, L. I., who had given her a good education in private schools and had granted her every wish in the matter of expensive clothes and money. When her father died, Miss Sprague continued, his estate quickly was dissipated.

Telling of the girl's determination to continue her life of luxury at the expense of others, Miss Sprague added: "Her attractive appearance and personality disarmed suspicion and created interest and sympathy when she was found out. She has had no religious training, and her only connection with the church was a social one, and then only with fashionable churches."

One of those who wrote to Judge Koenig in the girl's behalf was Dr. A. R. Braunlich of 153 West Eighty-second Street. He said that the prisoner was without the least idea of the value of money and that the several offenses charged to her by the police were the result of folly, rather than malice and calculation.

The girl signed the names of Dr. Maxwell Brown of 172 West Seventy-second Street to the check on which she obtained the fur coat. She previously had obtained employment as a secretary to Dr. Brown under the name Ruth True. She forged Dr. Brown's name to other checks on which she obtained articles from Stern Brothers, McCreery's, Saks's and Oppenheim & Collins's, detectives of the Stores Mutual Protective Association told Judge Koenig.

PROTESTS RELIGIOUS WAR.

Catholic Club Urges Coolidge to Warn Mexico of Disapproval.

A resolution of protect against religious persecution in Mexico was adopted last night by the Catholic Club, 120 Central Park South. The club heard a report by former Judge Alfred J. Talley and former Judge Morgan J. O'Brien, representing the Catholic Interests Committee of the club, both of whom recently appeared on behalf of the Catholic Club before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the House of Representatives in Washington.

The resolution which is to be presented to the Secretary of State and clergymen and teachers of religion in other denominations asks that President Coolidge, "directly or through the State Department, shall make known to the present Government of Mexico the indignation which its acts of religious persecution has aroused among the religious-minded people, and that the present conduct of the Government of Mexico is inconsistent with the continuation of friendly relations between this country and Mexico."

YALE LIBRARY GETS GUTENBERG BIBLE

RARE BOOK COST $120,000

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 15.—The Melk copy of the Gutenberg Bible, recently sold at auction in New York, has been presented to the Yale Library by Mrs. Edward S. Harkness of New York City, in memory of Mrs. Stephen V. Harkness.

In making this announcement today President James R. Angell of Yale said:

"Through her extraordinarily thoughtful generosity, Mrs. Harkness has once more put Yale under the deepest obligation by her memorable gift of the great Gutenberg Bible. The possession of this priceless treasure puts the prestige of the Yale Library once and for all beyond challenge."

The Bible was recently sold at auction in New York City to Dr. Abraham S. W. Rosenstein for $106,000, the highest price any book has ever brought in the open market. It is understood that Mrs. Harkness paid $120,000, which is a new high record.

The nearest price ever paid to this was $70,000 for the only known copy of the Fourth Edition of Shakespeare's "Venus and Adonis," purchased by a New York bookdealer in London in 1919.

The Gutenberg Bible, published in 1455, was the first book printed from movable type. The copy which now comes to Yale is one of the forty-two known, of which only twenty-five are complete. There are eight other copies in the United States and one odd volume.

The Melk copy takes its name from a town of less than 2,000 inhabitants in lower Austria. There, in a Benedictine monastery, the book remained from its publication until its recent purchase from the monks by a British bookseller for transportation to America. The first page of the Bible bears the name of the monastery, written in a seventeenth-century hand.

The Melk edition is in two folio volumes, in a brown calf binding, dating from about 1700. The pages are printed in double columns and are 15 inches high and 10⅝ inches wide. The copy is notable for its extraordinary state of preservation. Seymour de Ricci, one of the foremost authorities on Gutenberg, has said of it:

"Its general freshness and cleanliness are most remarkable; every leaf is sound and genuine; neither the printed book nor the venerable monastic binding has been cleaned, mended or repaired in the slighest degree."

Te t Is Vulgate of St. Jerome.

The Bible is the Vulgate Text of St. Jerome, who lived from about 340 to 420, and whose version was the standard of Christendom for a thousand years. The Apocrypha are interspersed with the Canonical books, and the arrangement of the books is in many cases radically different from that of the English Bible. The book is completely rubricated, and this work was done, collectors have declared, by a contemporary of Gutenberg, perhaps in his own workshop.

This copy has only forty lines on the first nine pages and forty-one on the tenth, while many other copies have forty-two lines to the page throughout. This indicates that there were two issues of the Gutenberg Bible. The Melk edition was one of the first, and is consequently of the utmost historical importance.

Dr. de Ricci, in a special pamphlet issued in regard to this copy, wrote of it:

"The quiet dignity of those twelve hundred and odd pages of dark and shapely type, the deep black of the ink, the broadness of the margins, the glossy crispness of the paper may have been equaled, but they have not been surpassed, and in its very cradle, the printers' art, thanks to the Gutenberg Bible, shines forth indeed as an art as much and more than as a craft."

The Melk copy will be placed in the rare book room in the new Sterling Memorial Library, which is to be begun at Yale on July 1. Here it will stand in a special exhibition case under unbreakable glass for the inspection of scholars from all parts of the world.

To Exhibit Forty Rare Bibles.

Andrew Keogh, Yale librarian, said today:

"Yale has a complete collection of important English Bibles. It is natural that we should desire to go behind the English version, so that scholars may have opportunity to compare it with its predecessors. The Gutenberg Bible is not only the rarest, the costliest and perhaps the most beautiful book in the world, but an indispensable link in the study of the Bible as a book.

"In honor of the 400th anniversary of William Tyndale, who made the first English translation of the Bible, we exhibited forty of our rarest Bibles, among them a copy of the first issue of the first edition of the King James Version of 1611. The Gutenberg Bible will double the interest in future exhibitions of this kind, showing as it does the differences in workmanship and style between the earliest of all editions and its English sucessors."

This is the third of Mrs. Harkness's recent gifts to the Yale library. In February of this year she presented to the University a complete set of John Sanderson's Biography of the Signers of the Declaration of Ihdependance and a copy, in James Madison's hand, of the Journal, Acts and Proceedings of the Federal Convention of 1787, which drew up the Constitution of the United States. The Sanderson biography contains the autograph signature of every signer of the Declaration of Independence.

Last year Mrs. Harkness gave the University the Note Book or Account Book of Nathan Hale, of particular interest to Yale because of the fact that Nathan Hale was graduated here in 1773.

The Gutenberg Bible is presented in memory of Mrs. Stephen V. Harkness, who died on March 27, 1926, and who herself gave Yale the Memorial Quadrangle and $3,000,000 for general endowment. In accepting the Bible at its meeting on Saturday the Yale Corporation passed the following resolution:

Voted, to record the gratitude of the President and Fellows to Mrs. Edward S. Harkness for her welcome gift to the university of the Melk copy of the Gutenberg Bible in memory of her mother-in-law, Mrs. Stephen V. Harkness; and to direct the secretary in transmitting to the donor this formal acceptance of her gift to thank her once more for her constant interest in the welfare of the university.

Plans are now being made to exhibit the Bible to the public. Professor Chauncey Brewster Tinker, Sterling Professor of English Literature, and Mr. Keogh will lecture next week on the book before an audience of Faculty and students who will then be given an opportunity to inspect it. Later it will be exhibited to the general public.

N. Y. U. PLANS TO ADD SIX COURSES IN ART

General Charles H. Sherrill, Chairman of the Council's Committee of the Department of Fine Arts, New York University, announced yesterday six new courses to be given next year in the department, in cooperation with certain New York institutions which he said were peculiarly qualified to advise upon both the instructions and the instructors of each new course.

A division of architecture will be inaugurated, and added to the department's mid-town division will be courses in printing and typography, costume and fashion, design in jewelry, in furniture, and preparation for advertising design.

General Sherrill characterized the innovation as democratizing art. He said the new courses were designed for students and men who are working and seek a practical education after business hours in the various arts designated, which they will now receive under specialized advice.

The announcement was made at the office of Colonel Michael Friedsam, President of B. Altman & Co., the principal sponsor of the university's department of fine arts, which in a little more than two years has gained an enrollment of nearly 1,500 students. Representatives of the various institutions which are to cooperate were present.

The instruction in architecture, said General Sherrill, will be given in collaboration with the Beaux Arts Institute of Design, and it is proposed thus to cover a complete professional course leading to a joint diploma signed by the institute and the university's division of architecture. Instruction will be given in the late afternoon and evening. Eventually this division will operate in the East Forty-second Street district, the greatest center for architects in this country. Professor E. R. Bossange, for eight years Dean of the College of Fine Arts of the Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh, will be in charge of this new division.

Courses in printing and typography will be under the auspices of the American Institute of Graphic Arts. The lectures in present day fashions of women's and men's wear are to be given in co-operation with Vogue, and the department will complement these with a course on historical development of costume.

A committee has been formed among the leading jewelers of this and neighboring cities to outline a course of design in jewelry. Instruction will be given in a miniature jewelry factory. Evening instruction will be given in furniture designing, in cooperation with the Art-in-Trades Club.

At the suggestion of the Advertising Club, General Sherrill said, the department will give a course of lectures on drawing and designing in advertising. It was pointed out that no apprenticeship for advertising had been given heretofore.

Former Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson was re-elected President of the New York Southern Society at the annual meeting of the society last night at the Waldorf-Astoria. Amos L. A resolution thanking Mr. Cason for his services as Secretary for four years was adopted.

Among members of the society who made short addresses were John W. Davis, Democratic candidate for President in 1924, and Norman H. Davis. President Adamson announced that committee appointments would remain in force for another year.

SLUMP IN RELIGION FOUND AT HARVARD

It Has Been Marked Since the War, Statistics Compiled by Dr. Coolidge Show.

EPISCOPALIANS ARE STRONG

Fifty Per Cent. Increase in Indifferent, Mainly at Expense of Unitarians and Catholics.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 15.—That there has been a marked slump in religion at Harvard since the war is the conclusion drawn by Julian L. Coolidge, Professor of Mathematics at the university, from an investigation of the subject of religious change that has been in progress there in the last decade.

Dr. Coolidge cites figures to prove his case in an article he has contributed to the current number of the Harvard Alumni Bulletin in an article entitled "Some Recent Harvard Religious Statistics."

"Almost every one who is interested in Harvard and in religion has ideas as to what is going on in Cambridge in the way of religious change," the article says. "Those who wish religion well see signs of hope. Those who would have religion die are equally hopeful. All have theories about the trend and the cause of the trend. That is very well, but why not examine what the students say about themselves?

"Every class report has masses of figures bearing on all the habits of the young men who are about to be released in society and religious preference is one of the matters about which the class secretary sees fit to inquire. It seemed to me that it would be interesting to make a comparative table of religious preferences at different times in the last generation. The following figures are from the first reports of the several classes indicated. The numbers indicated are the percentages of the men who reported to the secretary at all who fall in the various categories:

Evangelical	28	23	20	19
Unitarian	20	19	17	10
Roman Catholic	4	6	11	7
Jewish	2	4	8	13
Scattering	5	5	4	3
Not interested	21	20	18	27

Changes Considered Creed by Creed.

"Episcopalians—The changes here seem less than might have been expected. The Diocese of Massachusetts has increased enormously in numbers since the day when six Harvard men bore the body of Bishop Brooks to his grave. There are more so-called Church schools. It is interesting that there was not more growth before 1915 or more slump after the war.

"Evangelicals—I class under this head Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Baptists and Methodists. The decline here is slow but decided. It took place most rapidly in the earlier years. This removes the possibility of connecting it closely with the Fundamentalist-Modernist dispute. Perhaps the college men of today have a more highly-developed esthetic sense than their fathers and find the evangelical forms of religious expression less satisfying to their sense of beauty.

"Unitarians—Here again the figures tell their own story. Boston is the centre of Unitarianism in America and Harvard is perhaps less of a Boston institution than it was thirty years ago. Also, the Unitarian denomination is relatively less strong now than it was at that time. There are reasons enough. It is to be noted how rapidly the numbers fell off after the war.

"Roman Catholics—The steady growth from 1895 to 1915 is entirely what any one conversant with conditions in Massachusetts would expect. The very sharp decline since then is harder for the outsider to explain. The Catholic colleges are doubtless much stronger now than formerly. There may be other reasons known only to those who are familiar with the question from the inside.

"Jews—The increase here is even more striking than the Unitarian decline. This is the only body that does not show a drop after the war; the rate of gain is pretty much the same throughout. It might seem at first sight that the proportion of men who are religiously indifferent is greater among the Jews than among Christians. About one-fifth of the class of 1922 were broadly classed as Jews. Why should they show but 13 per cent. of the believers?

"A more careful analysis reveals that there is nothing very striking here. The 13 per cent. of Jews among the believers represent about 10 per cent. of the total class, and as the Jews, ethnically speaking, come to perhaps 20 per cent. of the class, it appears that about one-half of the Jews were religiously inclined. On the other hand, of the non-Jews about 54 per cent. 'profess and call themselves Christians.'

The "Not Interested" Class.

"The 'not interested' class is made up of small groups who call themselves agnostics, or atheists, or philosophers, or have no preference, and the large number who answer some of the Secretary's questions, but not this one. It is interesting that this class was slowly shrinking before 1915.

"I cannot remember the time when a good proportion of the best people did not bewail the growing religious indifference of Harvard men, and those who were bound to see the bright side of the situation were tempted to prove their case by finding new definitions of religion which left out whatever they personally considered superfluous. But the proportion of the 'not interested' class went slowly down till 1915. The great increase since then seems to have been mainly at the expense of the Unitarians and the Catholics; that is to say, the two extremes.

"It is hard to draw very definite conclusions from the table as a whole. Clearly there has been a marked religious slump since the war. It is hard to believe that there is not some connection between the two. I believe that the Episcopalians have held up because they have been more keenly alive to the situation than some others, and far better organized to cope with it than, let us say, the heterogeneous Evangelical category. I see nothing in the figures to connect the various changes with any change in the religious attitude of the university authorities or the trend of instruction.

"Is there a connection between the 50 per cent. increase in the proportion of the religiously indifferent and the increase in lawlessness in the same period? If so, what do we propose to do about it?"

FINDS COLLEGE EVIL IN MASS-THINKING

Dr. Paton of Princeton Declares Originality Is Curbed by 'Coaching From Sidelines.'

SEES CIVILIZATION AT CRISIS

Asserts That Man Using Fourth of Brain Has Built Up World too Complex to Maintain.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 15.—Discussing modern education and the three-quarters of the human brain which Dr. Frederick Tilney recently said were not used, Dr. Stewart Paton, Princeton psychiatrist, declared here tonight that "we shall have to turn our backs on some ancient academic superstitions." He enumerated two such superstitions in particular, saying, "in the first place, the love of learning, learning to live and use one's brain must be encouraged until it becomes greater than the love of examining—examinomania. The second superstition we must ignore is the one perpetuating artificial distinctions observed between body and mind."

Dr. Paton particularly contested what he considers the overcoaching and overtutoring of college students, saying: "The American university student has special reasons for being impressed with the importance of maintaining constant vigilance if he is to maintain personal and actual liberty. Constant coaching from the sidelines and few opportunities for playing the game his own way develop a spirit of mass action and mass thinking that interfere seriously with original thinking."

Continuing his objections to the "prohibitionizing" attitude of the age, Dr. Paton declared: "On close analysis we see that there are striking resemblances between the mental attitudes of the Prussian militarists, Soviet Communists, Ku Klux Klansmen and prohibitionists striving to prevent the use of wine or the teaching of evolution. Society cannot afford to put such faith in prohibitions."

Dr. Paton thinks civilization at the present time is confronted with a crisis. "Man," he said, "using only one-fourth of his available brain power, has built up a form of civilization too complicated to maintain unless intelligent efforts are made to learn to use his most valuable possession in order to analyze our higher mental processes. We must have some idea of the nature and force of the impulse compelling action when under pressure of instinctive activities.

"How do we react to our social environment? If we are technically scientists, are we living examples of 'common sense at its best?' Are we members of the philosophy department, and do we take life philosophically? Are we genuinely interested in art and literature, or are we primarily interested in finding an occupation where, protected by academic walls, we can live in an imaginary world far removed from reality? If we are members of the theological schools and professed representatives of religion, are we in search of a heaven in which we can live safely, while reserving a hell for those with whom we are in disagreement in regard to questions of dogma?"

Dr. Paton deplored the scantiness of study on the human brain in America. He said: "We have started movements to maintain our forests, our fish and other national resources, but nobody has suggested a movement to conserve the brain-power which is back of all this."

"Saying So Doesn't Make It So"

There are all sorts of mortgage guarantees.

The mere statement that a mortgage is "guaranteed" means nothing at all. There are two elements that are absolutely essential to make such a guarantee valuable.

One is the experience of the guarantor in guaranteeing mortgages in a particular community. The other is the amount of money back of the guarantee.

Our Company is the oldest and its business has been confined to guaranteeing mortgages exclusively in this community. It has the largest guarantee fund devoted solely to this purpose—$15,000,000.

Require this guarantee with every mortgage you buy. Such mortgages are for sale only by the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, at the addresses given below.

IT is not remarkabl that many men of studied discretion in matters of wearing apparel hav for many years confined their purchases exclusivly to the John Ward Shops. They kno from experiense that shoes bearing this time-honord name ar always in good taste. They kno also that they wear wel, and, what is equally important, retain their distinctiv lines to the end of their exceptionally long servis.

A visit to one of the John Ward Shops wil prove an interesting experiense for those who do not yet kno these fine shoes; who ar not yet familiar with the institution that has been bilt up around them.

PEACE IN MOROCCO, BRIAND'S TASK NOW

French Made Uneasy Over the Mediterranean Situation by Mussolini's Action.

SEEK A QUICK SETTLEMENT

Armistice at Once Will Be Demanded —Zone North of Ouergha May Be Occupied.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 15.—Mussolini's African speeches, the arrest of two Frenchmen on the Riviera suspected to have been in the Italian Secret Service, difficulties which are still very real in the way of peace in Morocco, and the troubles which M. de Jouvenal, the High Commissioner, are encountering in Syria are contributing to a very deep feeling of uneasiness in Paris about what the immediate future holds in store.

Premier Briand, following his usual method of asking one thing at a time, is bending all his energies to getting the Moroccan affair settled first. All the delegates to the Oudjda conference, including those of Abd-el-krim, are now on their way and already unofficial conversations have been taking place preparatory to the Oudjda meeting.

In these preliminary conferences all efforts have been directed toward alienating other tribes and their Caids, who have until now supported him. His representative at Oudjda may suddenly find himself alone, and it is for this that M. Briand and his negotiators are working. If they can isolate Abd-el-Krim they may get him to accept a pension with which to console himself in exile, after the manner in which they treated Abd-el-Kader some eighty years ago.

But in the attempt to get the wily Arab into this position there are difficult moves to be made. In the Paris press there is strong divergence of opinion on both the advisability and tactics of this peace-making endeavor, but the Government with one eye on Mussolini and the other on the Treasury, is determined to go the limit to secure a settlement. France cannot afford any longer to appear in the position of having her authority challenged at the two ends of her Mediterranean empire.

Will Demand Armistice at Once.

PARIS, April 15 (AP).—Premier Briand saw Count Quinones de Leon, the Spanish Ambassador, again today and talked about the Riff peace terms.

One of the conditions the French will insist upon, with the support of the Spanish delegates, is an immediate and complete armistice, with the possibility that the French will occupy the zone of the tribes north of the Ouergha which have made their submission since hostilities were suspended last Fall.

The French are determined not to leave these tribes at the mercy of a sudden irruption of Abd-el-Krim's forces in case the negotiations do not proceed to the pretender's satisfaction. This is one of the first points that will be discussed, and it probably will be settled at Taourit, Morocco, where Abd-el-Krim's delegates were expected today.

CUBAN STRIKE ULTIMATUM.

Spread of All Railroads Threatened Unless Agreement Is Made Tonight.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HAVANA, April 15.—If the Consolidated Railways of Cuba fail to put the labor agreement into force by 6 o'clock tomorrow night, the men on the United Railways of Havana, the Havana Central Railway, the Hershey Electric Railway and the other roads on the island will join. The strike was started on Wednesday afternoon by the Camaguey Brotherhood.

This announcement was made to the Government today by Brotherhood Delegation No. 2 of Havana. A manifesto has also been issued by the Santa Clara Brotherhood stating that the railroad men will stand as one in all parts of the island until the Consolidated Company agrees to the demand.

Efforts are being made by the brotherhood to get other unions to join the strike. Orders have been given by the Government that all rail properties be protected. Authority has been granted to the General Sugar Company and other concerns to run cane trains so that the sugar harvesting will not suffer.

President Machado called a Cabinet meeting and said that the Government might take drastic steps in the matter, as a shortage of food in the interior is bound to occur unless the trains run. It was added that the mails would have armed convoy.

UPHOLDS OPEN SHOP POLICY

Manufacturer Tells Metal Association It Prevents Strikes.

Paul C. DeWolf of the Brown & Sharpe Machine Company, Providence, R. I., speaking at the twenty-eight annual meeting of the National Metal Association, said yesterday that members of the association, all of whom maintained "open shops," had had the most prosperous year in their careers.

He opposed the "closed shop," maintaining that the "open shop" was the Constitutional right of every citizen and that it was better "because it brings closer relations between employer and employe." He said that there was not a single strike in the thirty-odd plants operated by members of the association during 1925.

J. B. Doan, President of the American Tool Works Company of Cincinnati, in a report of the committee for prevention of industrial acidents, said safety devices and bulletins not only reduced acidents but also cut insurance premiums and loss of working time.

New officers elected by the association for the coming year were: W. J. Cronin, President; L. Sparks, Vice President and Charles Blanchard, Secretary.

Guns Boom and Sirens Moan as Italian Premier Returns on Warship to Italy.

NATIVES HOIST HIM ALOFT

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TRIPOLI, April 15.—Ending what may be a historic tour of Italian Africa, Premier Mussolini sailed for Italy tonight. As the Premier's ship lifted anchor the guns from the city which welcomed him on Sunday fired farewell salutes, while sirens and whistles screamed.

In what amounted to a farewell speech at the Colonial Agricultural Union, Signor Mussolini declared his full strength will be thrown behind the development of the important colony here. He declared he was enthusiastic over what he had discovered, everything exceeding his expectations, and he promised to see that the Italian people realized what is here. "I assure you my trip will have important repercussion in Italy."

His remarks are interpreted here as meaning he will concentrate on directing the stream of immigration from Italy to Africa, thus offering a solution of one of the most difficult internal problems facing Italy today—namely, overpopulation.

With the population increasing at the rate of half a million yearly, this problem has reached proportions of an actual crisis, since the American immigration laws demand the current going to the United States—Italy has been without a place for her excess population, a circumstance which promised certain disaster unless a way out was found.

Premier Mussolini played around the fringes of the subject several times, declaring "Italians are people who reproduce rapidly and they are going to continue to do so. Italy is hungry for land and here is the opportunity to satisfy her."

He urged the colonists meanwhile to get to work and to develop themselves and the land. "You cannot build a great colony by dancing at the Grand Hotel," he said. "You must learn the technique of colonization. Faith is excellent, but it is not enough; you must also have knowledge."

Natives Carry Mussolini to His Car.

This afternoon the Premier had a great time as the guest of his black soldiers, the Ascaris. They staged savage African dances, a mimic bayonet and dagger duel and danced around Il Duce shouting and slashing the air with weapons. After the performance they seized Premier Mussolini, lifted him on their shoulders and carried him to his car. The Premier enjoyed the affair hugely, his face wreathed in smiles.

This morning he made a circuit of the farms and improvement projects near Tripoli, visiting a number of concessions conferred on colonists and getting their ideas as to what needs to be done to speed up matters here.

One of the largest landowners, Camillo Fenzi, an American citizen, formerly of Santa Barbara, Cal., and the son of a noted Italian horticulturist, urged him to clear out the deadwood among the citizenry, leaving only the highly selected and the most enterprising capable of colony building.

"Our immigration policy ought to begin," he said, "by clearing out all the parasites from Tripoli."

Premier Mussolini entertained the newspaper correspondents at tea aboard the Venezia late in the afternoon and seemed to be in excellent spirits, and although a trifle tired after five days of strenuous activity.

The Premier's health stood the strain of his gruelling dash about the country remarkably well under the circumstances. The wound in his nose has healed rapidly in the last few days and is no longer painted with iodine.

BRITISH JOURNALISTS TO STUDY WORK HERE

A project to bring to the United States two British journalists annually, for a stay of six months or a year, was announced yesterday by the English-Speaking Union, at a luncheon given at the University Club to Sir Campbell Stuart of The London Times.

The plan provides for the establishment of two fellowships, to be known as the Walter Hines Page Memorial Fellowships in Journalism. They are established to commemorate the services of the late Ambassador Page, himself one of the most distinguished members of the journalistic profession, in cementing the friendly relationship between the United States and Great Britain.

The first fellowship provides for a young English newspaper man who will spend a year in different newspaper offices throughout the United States. He will then return to resume his work on the newspaper with which he was originally associated on the other side of the Atlantic. It is expected that the first Englishman to hold this Junior Fellowship will arrive in New York about the end of May.

A Senior Fellowship provides for the coming of an older journalist of established position in the United Kingdom. It is hoped that this fellowship will be taken by a leading British writer, who may come over at the time of the National Congressional elections in the Fall.

Crew of His Yacht Attends Services —Body to Be Shipped Here Saturday

WIVENHOE, England, April 15 (AP).—The body of McEvers Bayard Brown, wealthy New York banker, who lived for thirty-six years aboard his palatial yacht, the Valfreya, on the coast of England, will be taken to Southampton Saturday for shipment to New York.

Memorial services for the recluse, who died on April 8, were held at the parish church here today. Among the chief attendants at the services were the captain and the crew of the Valfreya, who kept the ship ready for sailing for many years without ever getting orders to move.

REFUSES TO ADMIT MERCURY TO MAILS

EDITOR IN A HEATED REPLY

Says Ruling Hurt His Purse and Reputation — Fears Action Against May Issue.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Henry L. Mencken of Baltimore came here today to make a protest against the ruling barring from the mails the April issue of The American Mercury, but he was told by Horace J. Donnelly, Solicitor of the Postoffice Department, that the opinion of the postal authorities remained unchanged.

Solicitor Donnelly also refused to give a ruling at this time on the May issue of the magazine when Mr. Mencken alleged that his enemies were trying to "knock off" that issue by complaints to the Postoffice Department. Mr. Donnelly said he was not a censor and suggested that the May issue be deposited with the Postmaster of Camden, N. J., to be sent to Washington, so that if a complaint were filed a ruling would be made.

Mr. Mencken was accompanied by his counsel, Arthur Garfield Hays, and Alfred A. Knopf, publisher of the magazine. The Government was represented by Solicitor Donnelly, Walter E. Kelly, Assistant Solicitor, and W. C. Brien. There was much excited argument, which centred around the publication in the April issue of the article "Hatrack."

Counsel for Mr. Mencken contended there was nothing to excite the emotions in the article, but the postal authorities stuck to their contention that it violated the Federal statute prohibiting the mailing of obscene matter. Attempts to compare it with passages from the Bible and the classics did not change that attitude.

Says Mercury Is Not "Smutty."

Mr. Mencken contended that he has been injured financially and that his reputation had been assailed by the ruling of the department. He said advertising contracts had been canceled. "I'm damned," he said at one point, "if I want to be plastered in the newspapers of the country as the publisher of a smutty magazine."

His troubles were traced by Mr. Mencken to the activities of the Watch and Ward Society of Boston. He said also that his magazine had attacked institutions and the Administration, and although the Boston courts held in his favor, the Postoffice Department barred it from the mails.

Mr. Donnelly said the Watch and Ward Society had no connection with the department's ruling.

Might Reprint Rhinelander Case.

Mr. Mencken mentioned the Rhinelander case, asking why the department had not barred from the mails the newspapers carrying full accounts of that trial. Mr. Donnelly did not reply.

"Suppose I reprint a page from the newspaper accounts of the Rhinelander trial in my magazine, what then?" Mr. Mencken queried.

"We only cross bridges when we come to them," Mr. Donnelly replied.

"That's just the answer I expected," Mr. Mencken retorted.

Legal precedents were cited by Mr. Hays, who asserted that a great principle was at stake—namely, whether officials of the Postoffice Department had the arbitrary power to determine what opinions might be printed and distributed through the mails. He emphasized the decision of the Boston court in acquitting Mr. Mencken on the charge of selling improper literature and contended that action had been taken against his client by the Postoffice Department without a hearing, which he argued was against the fundamentals of Anglo-Saxon law.

"I will tell you frankly, Mr. Hays," said the solicitor, "that you have not convinced me that this thing does not come within the statute."

GARDINER FAMILY TO RETAIN ISLAND

Owner Sells Area, Leased as a Hunting Preserve by Mackay, to Pass It on to Heir.

Gardiner's Island, which is under lease to Clarence Mackay as a hunting preserve until 1940, has been reported sold by Lion Gardiner to Johnathan Gardiner. The island lies off the north shore of East Hampton Township. It is about seven miles long by three and one-half miles wide and comprises a tract of close to 16,000 acres. It has been held in the Gardiner family since the original grant to Lord Lion Gardiner in 1639.

The property was granted to Lord Gardiner as a reward for engineering work in the building of a fort at Saybrook, Conn., and has been handed down through the family in accord with the old English law of entail, passing from father to eldest son, to Lion Gardiner, the thirteenth proprietor.

The buyer will hold the property in trust for Winthrop Gardiner Jr., a nephew of the seller. Lion Gardiner, the seller, will retain a life interest in the property.

RUTH PAYS BAY STATE TAX.

Home Run King Settles Up After Non-Residence Plea Fails.

BOSTON, April 15 (AP).—George Herman (Babe) Ruth, home-run hitter, decided today not to wait out the Massachusetts Tax Commissioner. Although he had a week to do something about his back income taxes in this State, Ruth today turned in a check covering the claims of the State for the years 1923 and 1924.

Early this week it became known that a warrant was out for the ballplayer's arrest for non-payment of income tax. Ruth visited Henry F. Long, Tax Commissioner, who allowed him a week to prove his claim that he was not a resident of Massachusetts. The amount of the tax was not made public.

Ruth, who maintained a Winter home at South Sudbury, contended that he was not a resident of the State in the legal sense of the term. He did not claim a residence in any other State.

DANZIGER REVEALS MORE MILK GRAFT

W. Morgan, former assistant secretary to Dr. Frank J. Monaghan when he was Health Commissioner, so impressed was he with Justice Levy's warning that, instead, he spent most of the afternoon with Mr. Ryan, giving details, it was said, of the method of collecting the alleged graft from milk dealers, and particulars as to the ultimate disposition of the money. So important were these revelations regarded that it was reported last night that extreme activity was being displayed in Queens political circles in an endeavor to have the investigation restricted to certain channels.

The Board of Health dismissed Morgan. He was found guilty of insubordination and of what Commissioner Harris characterized as "irregularities" in connection with the milk investigation. Morgan is associated with Thomas J. Clougher, who was Dr. Monaghan's secretary, in the real estate business at Jamaica Avenue and Twombley Street, Jamaica, Queens.

Morgan, whose salary was $2,460 a year, has been in the Health Department for the last eighteen years. He has been under suspension since April 18 when he refused to appear before Commissioner Harris for questioning. He was represented at his trial by Harry Vollmer Jr. of 183 Montague Street, Brooklyn. He said he ignored the Commissioner's summons because he was on a leave of absence for three months without pay and was not subject to orders during that period. The trial board consisted of Dr. Harris, Deputy Police Commissioner Edward D. Kelly, representing Police Commissioner McLaughlin and Dr. Harry P. Swift.

Makes Written Denial.

Dr. Harris said that although Morgan had made no verbal explanation of his conduct, he had submitted, through his counsel, a written denial of the charges.

"I have been advised by counsel," said Dr. Harris, "that our trials of Department of Health employes need not be governed by the technicalities and rules of evidence that obtain in a court of law. Our action must conform to certain requirements.

"We could decide that a man was guilty of an offense, even if it were a felony, but the evidence we based our conclusions upon might not be acceptable in a court of law. For departmental purposes it is only necessary we satisfy ourselves of the truth or falsity of charges. Our findings may be reviewed by the courts, but not the question of facts upon which they are based."

The board also began the trial of Philip E. Pfistol of 588 East Second Street, Brooklyn, a food inspector, another of several inyolved in the milk situation. On request of his counsel, former Congressman Daniel Griffin of Brooklyn, the trial was continued until 2:30 P. M., April 22. Both Morgan and Pfistol, it was said, were implicated in Danziger's confession. Pfistol receives a salary of $2,000 a year, and has been under suspension since March 27. He has been in the Health Department since 1917.

Two officials of the Helath Department, as yet unidentified, are to appear before the Board of Health for trial at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

RADITCH IS OUSTED BY BELGRADE CABINET

It Resigns to Get Rid of Him and Then Forms a New Government Without Him.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, April 15.—Yugoslavia had another Cabinet crisis today. The Ministry resigned and was immediately reconstituted under the same Premier, M. Uzonowitsch, the object of the manoeuvre being to force out the Croatian leader, Stepan Raditch, after he refused a demand to resign. With him went two other Croatian Ministers, his nephew, Pavle Raditch, the Minister of Agrarian Reform, and Ivan Krajatch, the Minister of Commerce and Industry.

The remaining two Croatian Ministers stay in the Cabinet, so it would seem that M. Raditch's party has been split.

After overthrowing the previous Pashitch Government, M. Raditch has been making various accusations against individual Serbian members of the new Cabinet, which had not been in office a week. This caused the Serbians to demand that he leave the Ministry, and also aroused considerable criticism among his own followers.

It is believed that the present manoeuvre which is still rather obscure, is only the first step toward a more serious crisis.

POLISH MONARCHISTS SEEK DUKE OF YORK

Would Abandon Republic and Put Son of the British King on the Throne.

LONDON, April 15 (AP).—The conversion of the Republic of Poland into a monarchy, with the Duke of York, second son of King George, as King is the aim of a section of the Polish people, says a dispatch to The Daily Mail from Warsaw.

The correspondent says the idea of giving Poland a king is gaining ground there and the monarchists hope, if the nation adopts their view, to persuade the Duke of York to accept the crown.

As viewed in political circles here, such aspirations on the part of the Polish monarchists do not seem more likely of fulfillment than a similar desire of the Albanians, who vainly tried to induce Prince Arthur of Connaught to ascend their throne before it was accepted by Prince William of Wied in 1914.

It is stated that it may safely be assumed that British royal personages prefer the comparative surety of their own country to an uneasy crown of a central European State.

Negro Elder Held in $50,000 Bail.

Elder William Roberson, negro leader of the "Gospel of the Kingdom" cult, was held in $50,000 bail yesterday by Federal Judge Neblett, to answer an indictment charging violation of the Mann act. Roberson had gathered quite a following and had headquarters in this city and at Absecon, N. J. A number of his diciples were arrested about a month ago. Roberson was in Chicago at the time of his indictment, and when officers arrested him he warned them that they were outraging the "Messiah."

United Fund Announces This Year's Distributions to Fifty-six Institutions.

BASED ON AID TO THE POOR

Montefiore Gets $60,000 and Mt. Sinai $45,000—Free Service Is Increasing.

Allotting $100,000 more than last year, the Distributing Committee of the United Hospital Fund at a meeting yesterday in the reception room of the Mayor's office in the City Hall voted to distribute nearly $600,000 to the fifty-six member hospitals of the fund as this year's contribution toward meeting the cost of caring for the sick poor in these hospitals.

The money, which is raised through the annual appeal of the fund, is distributed to the hospitals in proportion to the amount of free service given to the sick poor regardless of race, creed or color. Last year the member hospitals of the fund provided a total of 3,456,111 hospital days of care, of which 1,635,126, or 47 per cent., were free.

Henry J. Fisher, President of the fund, entertained members of its Board of Trustees and Presidents and representatives of the member hospitals at a private dinner at the University Club last night.

PRAISES BELLEVUE SERVICE.

Dr. J. A. Miller Says Hospital Is Popular Despite Deplorable Wards.

In spite of the "deplorable condition" of buildings at Bellevue Hospital, patients receive the best of care and the service the hospital renders is popular, according to Dr. James A. Miller, who spoke at a meeting of the Tuberculosis Sanitarium Conference held yesterday on the Bellevue Day Camp Boat at the foot of East Twenty-sixth Street. Dr. Miller is President of the New York Tuberculosis and Health Association and chief physician at the tuberculosis division at Bellevue.

"In all the agitation now about the condition of the buildings at Bellevue," said Dr. Miller, "the fact must not be lost sight of that patients are contented in the hospital because of the excellent medical and nursing care they receive, and the hospital is popular in its own neighborhood, the region which knows it best. Bellevue never refuses a case. That explains why during three or four months in the Winter the tuberculosis wards are crowded beyond the capacity of eighty beds."

Dr. Miller said 1,920 tuberculosis cases were admitted to Bellvue last year and that 3,254 visits had been paid by patients to the tuberculosis clinic. The Day Camp Boat cared for 431 cases.

LONDON, April 15.—The Prince of Wales, traveling incognito as the Earl of Chester, left London today for Biarritz by way of Dover, Calais and Paris. He will spend tonight in Paris.

A large crowd, including many Americans, gathered at the Victoria Station to see him off. The Prince has apparently entirely recovered from his illness.

WHITTEMORE CAPTORS SHARE JEWELERS' GIFT

McLaughlin Distributes $1,300, Approving Such Rewards—Also Favors Bonus Plan.

Seven detectives who participated in the round-up of the Whittemore band of hold-up men shared yesterday in the division of $1,300 which had been accepted by Commissioner McLaughlin from H. C. Larter as Treasurer of the Jewelers' Association.

Commissioner McLaughlin, in announcing the division of the money, said he felt that not alone should members of the force be permitted to accept such gratuities for unusually efficient work, but that he favored the awarding of bonuses for extraordinary service as an incentive to all the men of the force.

The Police Pension Fund received $230 from the $1,300 and Detectives Walter Sullivan and John Cronin, who captured Whittemore, received $235 each. Detectives Joseph Daly, John Cordes, Jeremiah English, Cesesr Bonano, Edward Tracey and Thomas Horan received $100 each.

The Commissioner also announced that he would endeavor to bring about a change in the law of 1907 which limits the number of first-grade detectives, with compensation of $3,300 a year, to 150. He said he believed that patrolmen and second and third grade detectives, who receive less pay, should be eligible for a salary of $3,300 in compensation for work of the kind performed by Sullivan and Cronin.

The Commissioner also expressed the belief that all members of the force should be compensated for services beyond their regular working hours. He said that now only sixty men were entitled to compensation for overtime.

A charge against Joseph Trop, itinerant jeweler, that he had criminally received some of the jewels obtained by the Whittemore hold-up gang was dismissed yesterday by Magistrate Henry M. R. Goodman in the Essex Market Court. Trop, however, was held in $10,000 bail for a hearing before the Magistrate in Jefferson Market Court on April 23 on a charge of having six loaded pistols in his home at 156 Second Avenue at the time of his arrest several weeks ago.

Trop, who is 38 years old, when arrested on information supplied by William Unkelbach, one of the Whittemore robbers, had $10,000 in diamonds in his possession. These were seized by the police, but Detective Joseph Daly and Assistant District Attorney Richard C. Murphy told the Magistrate that, although the gems had been viewed by victims of the gang's robberies in this city, they had not been identified. The diamonds then were turned back to Trop.

GARVAN LEADS FIGHT ON COMMON COLD

Will Finance a Research to Discover Cause and Cure for Root of Many Ills.

A research to discover the cause and a cure for the common cold, which was pronounced one of the greatest scourges of humanity, was undertaken by the American Drug Manufacturers' Association at its convention at the Hotel Biltmore yesterday, when an offer to finance such a research was made by Francis P. Garvan, President of the Chemical Foundation.

Reporting good progress in the fight to establish the chemical industry in this country in competition with Germany in the fields which Germany formerly controlled, Mr. Garvan branched into the subject of the common cold, which he said was one of the greatest causes of mortality and economic loss, in spite of the fact that it is usually regarded as of slight importance. He said:

"Sitting at my desk, it seems to me as if a new industry was born in this country every minute, fathered by chemistry and mothered by research. But rectently, in my pride and boasting of our achievements, the curtain lifted over something undone, a problem I have brougnt to you and which has, I might almost say, overwhelmed me in its importance and in the little that has been done with it. This is the subject of the common cold.

"When you come to consider that all through our lives we go on suffering from a cold and pneumonia, from mastoiditis and the sinus troubles, and a thousand and one things which develop out of the common cold, to say nothing of the inherent weakening of the physical structure by these repeated assaults upon ourselves, but more particularly upon our children and our women, you realize the gravity of the common cold.

"Do you realize that ten days of every man, woman and child's activity a year, on the average, are lost throughout this country? It amounts to more than a million years of activity annually. The loss to agriculture, industry and all business activities is some 700,000 years of working time through the incapacitation of 15,000,000 workers in this country.

CANADA PROPOSES SWEEPING TAX CUTS

OTTAWA, April 15 (AP).—Canada proposes to reduce duties on the imported automobile. The duty on automobiles valued at not more than $1,200 retail, on motor trucks and on motorcycles is reduced in the budget submitted to the House of Commons by Finance Minister Robb this afternoon to 20 per cent. in the general tariff. The former rate was 35 per cent. This general tariff applies to imports from the United States. On automobiles worth more than $1,200, retail, there is a reduction under the general tariff to 27½ per cent.

The budget proposals have still to be approved by Parliament.

Probably the most interesting part to Canadians of the Finance Minister's budget speech was his announcement of a reduction in the income tax. This will occur largely through an increase of the exemptions, which are raised to $3,000 from $2,000 for married persons and from $1,000 to $1,500 for single persons. Distinction also will be made between earned and unearned income.

The receipt tax is wiped out. This tax was 2 cents on all written receipts from $10 up.

Dominion Day this year (July 1) is to see the return of 2-cent postage. The rate was raised to 3 cents during the war as a war measure.

Further exemptions and reductions in the sales tax are also proposed.

Other changes, mostly by way of reduction in tariff rates, are recommended, and it is provided that the British preferental tariff, after Jan. 1, 1927, is to apply only to goods conveyed direct to a sea or river port of Canada, without transshipment.

The balance of trade in Canada's favor was shown to be $402,695,000, constituting a record for any year since the war.

SEEK A UNIVERSAL SCIENTIFIC SPEECH

World Engineers in Conference Here Are Asked to Construct a Common Language.

A NUT AND BOLT ENTENTE

American and British Delegates Agree to Make Hardware of Similar Measurements.

The construction of a world technical language for use by scientists and engineers was urged yesterday by Dr. C. O. Mailloux at the meeting of the International Electrotechnical Commission composed of electrical and engineering experts representing eighteen nations.

"A difficulty of the past has been that nations had no common speech," he said. "Specifications for machinery and measurements were not the same. This was all right so long as nations were trading on their own ground. But internationally the United States, which has always been noted for its wide margins in filling specifications, was at a disadvantage.

"The American manufacturer was apt to make his ten horsepower machine really capable of fifteen horsepower, whereas in some other country ten horsepower would mean ten horsepower and no more.

"One important agreement that has already practically been made internationally is with regard to the problem attending the resistance of copper wire. Now the same thermometric value in measuring copper wire is used all over the world. The standardization of aluminum is another problem practically solved.

An Anglo-Saxon nut and bolt entente was achieved by the delegates yesterday afternoon. A tentative treaty was adopted under which the British will hereafter cut the threads on the inside of the nuts they manufacture, so that American-made bolts will fit them comfortably. Heretofore the American bolt and British nut on the one hand, and the American nut and British bolt on the other, have refused to interact. Sir Richard Glazebrook of the British delegation made an eloquent speech in favor of Anglo-American unity in the field of hardware. By putting up a common front on questions of international ironmongery, the British lion and the American eagle will be able to save millions a year, according to the speaker.

It was learned yesterday that the commission discovered when the Andania docked here on Monday that the customs officials wanted to levy a duty of about $400 on four huge packing cases full of scientific documents, printed in English and French, and containing the fruits of several years of research work by the scientists who compose the commission. They were finally admitted upon payment of $4 after the inspectors had spent several hours in searching the contents of the boxes for dutiable material.

Twenty sporting prints in color, Orme's collection of "British Field Sports," brought $3,700 last night in the American Art Galleries at the final session of the sale of books and prints from the libraries of Victor Thrane of Chicago and of a New York collector. The sale brought a grand total of $71,102.50.

The Orme collection has been called the finest set of sporting books ever issued, and complete copies are rare, since many of the volumes were broken up and the prints sold separately. The book auctioned last, which was issued in London in 1807, contained, in addition to the twenty colorplates, a colored title page. The buyer was L. Gormme.

A complete set of the rare Sporting Magazine, from the commencement in 1792 to its termination in 1870, 156 volumes, was bought by Charles Scribner's Sons for $1,250. J. F. Lewis gave $1,150 for a portrait in oils of the Marquis de Lafayette. A collection of unpublished letters written by Lafayette and Fanny Wright to each other, seven of them by Lafayette and eight by Fanny Wright, was bought by E. F. Bonaventure for $475.

William Herbert's copy of William Marshall's translation of Marsilio of Padua's "The Defense of Peace," London, 1535, was bought by Walter M. Hill for $950.

A copy of Nicholas Hooke's "Amanda, a Sacrifice to an Unknown Goddess," London, 1652, was bought for $810 by James F. Drake, who also paid $600 for a copy of the first edition of Robert Herrick's "Hesperides." A copy of the first English translation of Sallust, London, 1520, was bought by Martin McGowan for $725.

An uncut copy of the first edition of Oliver Goldsmith's "The Citizen of the World" was bought by I. Isham for $615. The Brick Row Book Shop gave $450 for a set of first edition of the works of Henry Fielding, sixteen volumes. Charles Scribner's Sons gave $400 for a set of the Scribner edition of the works of Eugene Field on Japanese vellum.

$5,000 FOR SEAMEN'S STUDY.

Carnegie Fund Aids Marine Association—$5,000 for Library.

At the annual meeting of the American Merchant Marine Library Association yesterday at 67 Wall Street it was announced that a gift of $5,000 had been received from the Carnegie Corporation for the development and support of a supervised educational service for seamen as an adjunct to the library work of the association. Another contribution announced was $5,000 from Miss Mary G. Thompson of New York, for the development of library service to Coast Guard stations and cutters.

An endowment memorial fund has been established by Mrs. Harriet T. Cramer of Claremont, Cal., in memory of her husband, Eugene C. Cramer, for the purchase of educational books.

Mrs. Henry Howard, National President of the association, in her report for 1925 said that 250,000 books were circulated to ships, to Coast Guard vessels and stations and to lighthouses from the twelve dispatch offices of the association at Baltimore, Boston, Galveston, Mobile, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, San Francisco, Sault Ste. Marie, Seattle and Tampa.

Court Refuses to Fix Bail for Three Linked in Robbery of Restaurant.

Magistrate Edward Weil in the Harlem Court yesterday held three girls without bail for examination tomorrow when they pleaded not guilty to participation with members of the Koeber hold-up gang in the robbery of a Chinese restaurant at Third Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street on the night of March 11.

The prisoners were Mrs. Norah Green, 21 years old, wife of James Green, who received a sentence of twenty years last Tuesday for his part in the hold-up and murder of a Jamaica restaurant owner; Kitty Kraus, 17, who denied that she was the sweetheart of Herbert Koerber, leader of the gang, now awaiting sentence to the death chair for the murder, and her sister, Mary, 19, sweetheart of John Koerber, brother of the murderer, who is awaiting trial.

Wing Bo Sun and Sing Long Lo, owners of the restaurant, positively identified John as the man who covered them with a pistol while his confederates, they said, took from them $100 and a gold watch and chain, worth $115.

Police Captain Stephenson Ill.

Police Captain John T. Stephenson, 70-year-old commander of the Wadsworth Avenue Station, is in a serious condition in Lutheran Hospital, 144th Street and Convent Avenue, after an operation for intestinal trouble, but is said to have a fair chance of recovering. Captain Stevenson, who was reinstated by former Commissioner Enright after being out of the department for seventeen years, became ill a week ago. He lives at 601 Cathedral Parkway.

TALKS TO 14 CITIES BY PHONE AND RADIO

General Carty 'Hooked' Up From Boston to San Francisco in Telephone Celebration.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 15.—As the feature of exercises at the Boston City Club tonight commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the invention of the telephone, a demonstration of unusual significance, exhibiting the combined powers of wire and radio telephony, was successfully carried out.

While an unseen audience of thousands listened to radio from Station WEEI, General John J. Carty, Vice President of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, carried on a conversation by long-distance telephone with fourteen cities between Boston and San Francisco.

The voices of fourteen telephone officials talking from their offices stretching across the continent, as in turn they came on the line and chatted with General Carty, were heard clearly by the 1,200 men who packed the City Club auditorium and the thousands listening in by radio.

A loud speaker standing on the platform near General Carty, who spoke into two microphones, amplified the answering voices of the fourteen telephone men, and thus made it possible for the radio audience to hear the conversation.

Another feature was the projection of special "talking motion pictures," Thomas A. Watson, who assisted Professor Alexander Graham Bell in his experiments leading to the invention of the telephone, was shown discoursing on the telephone's development.

This part of the program also was broadcast, and according to General Carty it was the first time that "talking motion pictures" were successfully transmitted over the radio. Mr. Watson, who is in Florida, listened in by radio and heard himself "talking" in Boston.

Standing before the microphones as the switch was thrown, he called cheerily, "Hello, New York." Instantly came a voice which boomed through the large auditorium: "This is New York, Bond speaking." After inquiring about the weather, Mr. Carty bade New York good-bye and called, "Hello Harrisburg." Instantly came the responding voice, "Harrisburg, Shaffer speaking."

This was continued across the country, the hook-up passing through Beaver Dam, Ohio; Chicago, Davenport, Iowa; Omaha, North Platte, Neb.; Denver, Rawlings, Wyo.; Salt Lake City, Winnemucca, Nev., Sacramento and San Francisco.

CONSECRATE CHAPMAN PLOT

HARTFORD, Conn., April 15 (AP).—Gerald Chapman, executed at the State prison at Wethersfield on April 6, was buried in consecrated ground in Mount St. Benedict Cemetery here, the Rev. Francis P. Nolan, pastor of St. Justin's Church and superintendent of the cemetery, said tonight.

The Catholic Transcript in its issue today printed a letter to the editor asking that paper to explain how it was possible for Chapman to have been buried in consecrated ground as had been reported in Hartford newspapers. The Transcript editor took his correspondent to task for his apparent ignorance of Roman Catholic theology.

Uprights (foot-impelled) from $695
Uprights (electric) from $995

Grands from $1875

APRIL is Special Exchange month at Aeolian Hall. During this month, we offer a large bonus on old instruments, to encourage the exchanges that would ordinarily be made later.

We do this because we ourselves save money on exchanges made in April. The great majority of instruments taken back are always disposed of in our Great Annual Sales of Exchanged Instruments, held each May. And the storage charges thus saved are represented in the extra April allowance.

This is the Special Exchange Offer

WE WILL ALLOW YOU 20% MORE in April on your present instrument in exchange for a new Grand or Upright Piano or Duo-Art Reproducing Piano than our regular scale. This means that if your old instrument is ordinarily worth $300 in exchange, you can get $360 now—if worth $150 you get $180 now—if worth $500 you get $600 now.

Moreover, you need not take delivery of the new instrument at this time, nor make any payment. We take your old instrument giving you a due-bill for the specially large allowance. Later, you may have the new instrument delivered—in the fall, if you wish. If planning to move, you can save cartage on your present piano also, by letting us call for it before you move and deliver the new one after. We make no charge for this service.

Remember—your old instrument is worth more today than it ever will be again. It is worth more this month than it will be next. It is worth more this year than next year. Its value automatically lowers each year you have it.

A few words in behalf of The New Yorker's advertisers

MORE than fifty distinctive retail establishments on Our Island have turned The New Yorker into a bazaar. In it they display for your approval new and smart merchandise of every kind gathered from every part of the world.

Pictured on this page are the exteriors of fifty of New York's finest retail stores—the first fifty to discover bright New York's discovery, The New Yorker.

So that the The New Yorker brings you, almost with the promptness of the daily newspaper, the first news of merchandise shown in New York's leading stores—and with a quality of illustration individual to The New Yorker.

It constitutes a great reader guide as infallibly informative as The New Yorker's other guides to what is best in the theatre, music, art, books, moving pictures, where most enjoyably to dine and dance.

A shopping trip through the pages of this week's New Yorker, moreover, covers more than the Avenue. It will take you into the smart restaurants, hotels and supper clubs, book shops catering to active minds, the salons of such high class automobile manufacturers as Rolls Royce, Packard, Pierce Arrow, Lincoln and others. It tells you, in a word, of the attractive things of every kind that help to make life on Our Island a little easier in the living.

* * *

Advertising, the text books say, is news—and advertisers in The New Yorker have embellished this axiom by creating their messages in the very spirit of The New Yorker itself.

They have caught the mood of The New Yorker; injected into their copy and illustrations a spirit of brightness, a verve that carries their readers into the realms of The New Yorker's own editorial brilliance.

We take this opportunity to acknowledge to them their part in the origination of a new advertising personality, in the development of a new type of advertising interest.

Of Interest to Advertisers

This advertising standing with New York's most select retail establishments is of decided importance to national advertisers in the metropolitan field. It is, of course, evident that store executives, merchandising men and buyers in New York's great stores are watching The New Yorker with the keenest of interest.

The national advertiser can in The New Yorker focus on his advertising message the concentrated attention of those people who in New York have the most to do with the stocking and pushing of his merchandise.

Until May 1, space in The New Yorker may be ordered for a year in advance at the present low rate of $250 a page.

Dry Unit Chemist Describes Bootleg Process; Kitchen Utensil as a Sample Still standards of private conduct into the hearts of all the American people, they have now organized large and influential societies of clergymen and laymen, enormously financed, who work outside of the church walls and endeavor by unceasing effort and unflagging zeal to have these standards of conduct enforced by State and national laws upon those people who prefer to follow other standards of conduct, innocent but not religious, within the purview of these churches.

Nation-Wide Fight on Tobacco.

"They all declare that prohibition under the Eighteenth Amendment is only the first step in their program of moral and religious legislation, and the Rev. S. Edwin Burrows of the International Reform Association informed me with a flourish of pride that they had already secured initiatory legislation against tobacco in seventeen States of the Union and that they had proposed to pay him $10,000 a year to fight tobacco as soon as prohibition was firmly established."

"The Methodist Church is out-Herodding Herod in its stand for the religious control of our people," said Mr. Church, and he added: "It is with the zeal of a Torquemada striving for the ecclesiastical mastery of private conduct, not through the Gospel but through law."

Regarding the Baptist Church, Mr. Church charged that it is moving "heaven and earth" to wipe out by constitutional action "every source of pastime and pleasure of those weary and toiling masses who more and more are looking to Sunday as a day of healthful and happy exercise."

Mr. Church declared that if the Catholics of the United States engaged in the same kind of a political policy as Protestant denominations have adopted, the Ku Klux Klan "would be burning their churches within a week."

He assailed conditions in Pittsburgh under prohibition. The "spy system," he said, was being openly advocated by J. D. Mayer, the United States District Attorney at Pittsburgh. He said students were urged to spy on their fellow-students in quest of liquor.

Mrs. Mary T. Norton, member of Congress from New Jersey, was one of the Representatives who urged modification of the Volstead law. She said prohibition had driven many persons to the use of drugs and advocated a milder law as a step toward temperance.

Messrs. Murphy and Doren testified principally as to the number of stills supposedly in the country as well as just what kind of whisky or other intoxicating drinks can be made from corn sugar and malt and other products.

HILL TAKES THE STAND.

Mr. Hill led off today for the wets. Denying that "Congress under the Eighteenth Amendment does not possess the power to modify the Volstead act in the interest of true temperance in this country," the Maryland Representative proceeded with a legal argument.

"Today the Volstead act permits and legalizes cider and wine containing possibly from 2.7 to 11.68 per cent. of alcohol," he said. "Today Congress has the power to permit and legalize similar beverages to be sold under proper restrictions for use in the home. Congress has the power to pass such legislation in ten minutes, if it desires."

"On Jan. 8, 1926," he continued, "General Andrews made the following statement on the above matter in reference to the Volstead act:

"'Section 29 has been interpreted by the courts in the case of the United States, vs. Hill and in the case of Isner vs. United States, and I am satisfied that the Court has properly interpreted the law in these cases, which interpretation, as I understand it, amounts to this:

"'That a householder who manufactures in his home for home consumption ciders and fruit juices which acquire by fermentation one-half of one per cent. or more of alcohol by volume, but which are not intoxicating in fact, does not violate the law, but that the law is violated if the fermentation process is allowed to proceed to the point where the beverage becomes intoxicating in fact.'

"The two cases of United States vs. Hill and Isner vs. United States settled the law on the immediate power of Congress to so modify the Volstead act as to permit such temperate beverages as wine and beer when sold under proper restrictions," Mr. Hill declared.

Says Haynes Changed Ruling.

Mr. Hill told in detail his famous case in which he was indicted for making high power beer at his Baltimore home to test the meaning of "intoxicating liquor." For nearly two years, he said, he had tried to learn from official channels what "intoxicating liquor" was. Judge Britt, the prohibition unit attorney, told him one-half of one per cent. was the definition, but he wrote to former Commissioner Roy A. Haynes, who said his office was not disposed to act against the home brewer of cider or fruit juices containing not more than 2.75 per cent. alcohol. But later, said Mr. Hill, this definition was revoked and one-half of one per cent. came back.

"The reason," said Mr. Hill, "was because I asked him if 2.75 per cent. alcohol in cider was not intoxicating and to kindly approve my 2.75 per cent. beer bill as not intoxicating."

The jury in his case, related Mr. Hill, freed him after seventeen hours, and "thus legalized beverages of different description having alcoholic content of from 2.7 to 11.68 per cent.

"If home made cider and wine containing from 2.7 to 11.68 per cent of alcohol are not intoxicating in fact, and are legal when made in the home," he added, "it is absurd to say similar beverages are not equally legal and equally not intoxicating in fact if made under Government supervision and sold under Government supervision for consumption in the home or with meals in properly regulated hotels.

"Today, the Volstead act permits and legalizes cider and wine containing possibly from 2.7 to 11.68 per cent. of alcohol. Today, Congress has the power to permit and legalize similar beverages to be sold under proper restrictions for use in the home."

Weller Urges Modification.

Representative Royal H. Weller of New York, called to the stand, said:

"As a member of the House Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives and representing the Empire State of New York, I desire to say, after a close investigation of the sentiment not only in the State of New York but, as far as possible, throughout this section of the country, I am convinced that there is an urgent demand that the Volstead act may be amended by Congress so that light wines and beer may be drunk without fear of violating the law."

Representative Weller declared the fear of the drys that modification of the Volstead act would lead to a return of the saloon was unfounded.

"The Government," he said, "could more adequately control the legitimate sale and distribution and collect excise taxes than it could attempt to enforce a law which in so many parts of our country is felt to be unjust, a law that apparently is not wanted and is disregarded by many persons."

Mr. Weller, who has introduced a bill to "promote temperance in the United States," asserted "the poll recently conducted by the newspapers throughout the country, while not conclusive, fairly indicates the trend of sentiment."

Concerning his bill he said:

"It provides that the Volstead law, in so far as it affects the alcoholic content of light wines and beer, be repealed and substitutes therefor the words 'wines and beer which are intoxicating in fact consistent with the Eighteenth Amendment.' The effect of this is to provide for the manufacture, sale and distribution of wines and beer only.

"I respect the opinion of every man and feel this is a measure calculated to provide, on the one hand, temperate alcoholic drinks, and on the other, it will be so acceptable to the people at large and will be capable of being enforced.

"Should this bill become law, the Government will collect an excise tax for revenue and control the sale and distribution. It serves no good purpose, because we differ in opinion, to call one another traitors to the Constitution.

Says Law Is Rendered Absurd.

"The people have a right to petition Congress to a change of law which has proved so dissatisfactory to the majority at large. Let such a law be enacted that will command the abiding confidence of all our citizenry."

"The interpretation that one-half of 1 per cent. by volume is intoxicating, in fact," Mr. Weller declared, "is ridiculous and absurd and tends to bring the enforcement of the law to a state of wanton disregard. It has been treated as a joke by any pupil from the high school age up. It is made more ridiculous by the police officers annoying restaurant guests by tasting the contents of glasses on the tables, arresting the waiters, seizing flasks, with the fine pretention of law enforcement, and these men theoretically uphold the dignity of the law.

"Internal revenue agents and prohibition enforcement officers, usually thought to be engaged in arresting moonshiners, seizing stills, breaking up narcotic rings, appear now to be openly engaged in 'frisking' citizens of bottles and flasks, enticing an elevator boy to purchase for them a bottle of liquor, and resorting to acts which practically amount to a violation of law, to spy and procure evidence necessary to arrest a waiter or an employe of a hotel, to institute padlock proceedings. These acts only tend to arouse resentment and make more confusing than ever the attempt to enforce the law."

Mr. Weller suggested the following in order to accomplish something in the United States similar to the Quebec plan:

1. That Congress pass an amendment allowing light wine and beer.

2. That Congress allow each State to determine the intoxicating content of alcohol.

3. That Congress recognize concurrent power between the States and Government in enforcing what each determines as intoxicating.

4. That Congress pass the Weller "Temperance bill," eliminating hard liquors and providing for light wines and beers.

DRY UNIT CHEMIST CALLED.

Senator Reed had on hand what he described as "this thing." It was an ordinary steam pressure cooker, supposed to be an improved kitchen apparatus. The Senator inquired of General Andrews, who was present, if he knew whether or not the cooker was also used extensively as a still. General Andrews replied he did not, and suggested that the Senator inquire of Dr. J. M. Doren, the chief chemist of the prohibition enforcement unit. Thereupon Dr. Doren took the witness chair.

"Can you answer the question I asked General Andrews?" said Mr. Reed.

"I do not know," replied Mr. Doren, "of any use of such apparatus as this for purposes of illicit distilling."

"Are you familiar with this kind of apparatus?"

"Yes, I am familiar with it."

Dr. Doren insisted that it would require practically a reconstruction of the machine to make it possible to utilize it as a still.

"Do you mean," asked Senator Reed, "that this apparatus with a worm, or a cooling apparatus, attached to the top, cannot be used as a still?"

"If that container is closed," Dr. Doren replied, "and has a pipe from the top inserted in an opening through which vapor can be conducted to a condenser, and a means for collecting the condensate, then you have a still."

Senator Reed—Yes, and that could be a little simple piece of pipe, either a coil or a straight pipe?

A.—Well, it has got to be a little bit more than a simple straight pipe, Senator, otherwise you cannot condense the vapor. It is not a matter of theory as much as it is practice on that. You have to have a sufficient surface so constructed as to cool your vapor and get a condensate. Furthermore, this apparatus has absolutely no arrangement, as I see it, for what we know as raising the alcoholic content of the vapor. Rectification, so to speak, and the distillate you could get there in the simple way you describe would be a very weak alcoholic distillate.

Q.—Well, it is certainly as good an apparatus as this boiler that we had in here yesterday. Did you see that? A.—No, sir, I did not.

Q.—Well, I do not know that we will get very far, doctor. I simply want to get the facts. You can heat your mash in this, can you not? A.—Yes, you can heat your mash, yes, sir.

Q.—And you can vaporize it? I am not talking about it being a perfect apparatus. That is true, is it not, you can vaporize it? A.—Yes, you can vaporize it.

Q.—And if you attached to it a pipe or apparatus through which these vapors can be condensed you can draw off those vapors in the forms of alcohols, whether they are perfect or imperfect? A.—That is theoretically so, but to be of practical use you have to have either what is known as a boiling head or some surface where you can get condensation in order to bring about a raising of the proof of your vaporized alcoholic mixture. Until you get that in practice you do not get any distillation.

Witness Denies He Is Unfair.

Senator Reed contended that all that was necessary to make a still out of his patented cooker was a single condensing pipe, but Dr. Doren as positively asserted that more than that was needed to get the rectification effect without, which the product would be so weak as to be practically useless as an intoxicant. He repeated that the cooker would be practically of no value as a still unless it underwent a radical reconstruction.

"You seem to be antagonistic," said Senator Reed.

"No, Senator, I am fair because I think I know what the facts are," replied Dr. Doren.

Q.—Are there not thousands of these particular things that I have got here—this cooker—in use in the United States, with a little apparatus attached to the top and used as stills? Do you know? A.—I have never heard of an elaborate cookery apparatus like that used. I cannot say that is, not to my knowledge.

Q.—They use simpler things than this? A.—Very much simpler.

Dr. Doren had brought a still of his own, and at this point it was introduced into the evidence.

"What do you call this arrangement?" Senator Reed asked.

"This piece I hold in my left hand," replied Dr. Doren, "is a condenser. As you can see, it has a coil, spiral, which serves to give quite a length during which the vapor can be cooled down by the surrounding water—it is a water-jacketed affair—and condensed into liquid.

Q.—Well, to get it into the record, this contrivance you have here is about fourteen to sixteen inches tall, twelve inches in diameter, made of metal, and has a lid coil inside it. You can pick it up in one hand and carry it anywhere, that is right, is it not? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—A man can take this whole still you have brought in here this morning, both pieces, and walk off with them in his hands easily? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—I will ask you to look at this little keg. Will you examine it? That keg is charred on the inside, is it not? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—That is the kind of kegs that is used? A.—Have been, I mean. I do not know whether there are now.

Q.—Well, there is no law that can prevent selling them that you know of, is there? In the present form no law against that? A.—I do not know.

Charring Serves as "Ripener."

"Well, I do," said Senator Reed, "the object of a charred keg of that kind, when used in the liquor business is to purify, or, as we call it, ripe or age the liquor; is that true

"That is true. That is the purpose of a charred keg in the whisky business," replied Dr. Doren.

"You do not know of any use that they put charred kegs to, any general use, except that?" asked Mr. Reed.

"No I do not, any substantial use," was the reply.

"I want to show you here a sample of a product, charred oak sticks. Did you ever run across those in your connection with this law?" asked Senator Reed.

"Every once in a while," said Dr. Doren, "we get a sample of some kind of material of that sort taken up around moonshine plants."

Q.—The purpose of those charred oak sticks is the same as charring the inside of a keg; it is intended to purify, age, ripen, improve alcohol that has been manufactured? A.—If found around a moonshine place, I would say so.

Q.—Whether they are found around a moonshine plant or in a man's kitchen or wherever they are, that is the purpose for which those things are used, and they are sold and are regularly on the market? A.—They may be used for that purpose.

Q.—You do not know any other use they are generally put to, do you, doctor? A.—I cannot say I do.

Extent of Corn Sugar's Use.

At this point Senator Reed brought corn sugar into the record. He handed Dr. Doren a sample. Dr. Doren tasted it and pronounced it the genuine article. Answering a question, he said he could not give a definite answer as to whether the consumption of corn sugar has increased fourfold since 1921.

"You do not know the figures showing the increase?" Senator Reed asked.

"No, sir."

"You could not say then whether I am correct when I say that from 1921 to 1925 it increased from approximately 125,000,000 pounds to 500,000,000 pounds annually?"

"Well, I know enough about corn sugar," replied Dr. Doren, "to feel that the figure is an error, although whether it has increased substantially I cannot say."

Q.—Senator Reed—Is corn sugar used extensively on the table? A.—Yes, in the form of syrup, I believe it is used very extensively.

Q.—But outside of the syrup, I am not speaking of that, I am speaking of sugar? A.—It comes to the table in the form of preserves and commercial jellies. As such, I doubt if there is very much used of it.

Dr. Doren challenged Senator Reed's statement that other sugars, cane and beet, are cheaper than sugar made of corn. The corn is a little cheaper, he said, than the others.

"Is whisky or alcohol made of it?" Senator Reed asked.

"Undoubtedly, to some extent," Dr. Doren answered.

"But you do not know to what extent?" was asked.

"No, sir," replied Dr. Doren.

Q.—Would you say that the increase of the use of this variety of sugar in the last four years would have amounted to an increase of fourfold for use as an edible product? A.—Well, that is very hard to say, although I believe that corn sugar has increased rather substantially as an edible product.

Q.—Rather substantially? A.—Due to the fact that I believe that it is a fact of somewhat common knowledge that the use of commercially preserved fruits and jellies is in much greater proportion than the home-prepared food articles of similar kinds.

Q.—But you cannot state the proportion? A.—No.

Q.—Now they make whisky out of malt, too, do they not, doctor? A.—Not that I know of. If you refer to syrup malt, heavy malt syrup, I do not know that they do.

Q.—Is it not sold in cans, in vast quantities and regularly employed by the illicit whisky business? A.—Not for the manufacture of whisky.

Q.—In the manufacture of what is known as malt whiskies? A.—Not that I found a case of that. I know of no case in years where it was used in the manufacture of spirituous liquors.

Q.—It could be used, could it not? A.—Of course.

USE OF SYRUP FOR BEER.

Dr. Doren said that as malt syrup contains some fermentable sugar it could be distilled into an intoxicating drink. He said it was true it could be used as a sour mash, but he did not believe that was done.

"Well," remarked Senator Reed, "I hope you will not put your belief in, because I know it is done. I know it as well as a man can who has not seen it himself. To what extent is it used in brewing beer?"

"I do not know, but believe it is so used. We all know it is used to quite an extent, because samples that have come to the laboratories have shown it," answered Dr. Doren.

Senator Reed, reverting to the corn sugar, asked: "Do they call this corn sugar grape sugar sometimes?"

"Yes, sir," was the reply.

"Yes, that is the common name," said Senator Reed, "and now I want to call your attention to the increase in what we call grape or corn sugar, the product I have been speaking about. I have here in my hand a Department of Commerce report. An official report. Would you mind looking at what the figures are for 1923? They are 523,909,513 pounds, that is correct, is it not?"

"Yes, sir," Dr. Doren answered.

Senator Reed—The amount used in 1914 was only 174,368,818 pounds? A.—174,368,818 pounds.

Q.—Now, in 1919, 157,276,442 pounds. In 1921, 132,035,887 pounds, but in 1923, 527,909,513 pounds. That shows a good deal of an increase, does it not? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—And since that we have had nearly three years go by, and if the same proportionate increase continued, if the proportionate increase was kept up, we are using today something over a billion pounds of this variety of sugar? A.—I did not understand that those figures refer to this variety of sugar other than the general classification of corn sugar or glucose.

Q.—Have you ever come across in your investigations these different essences that are used—I guess "essences" is the correct term, you know what I mean anyway—for the purpose of flavoring these alcohols? A.—Yes.

Q.—A rye flavor? A.—Said to.

Q.—Said to? A.—Alleged to.

Q.—The one I hand you is marked "Rye," and here is one marked "Holland." That means Holland gin, I presume, does it not, Doctor? A.—I presume so.

Q.—Now here is another marked "Bourbon." It does not say good old Bourbon, but I naturally use that name. That is another one, is it not? A.—Apparently so.

Sold in the Open Market.

"And each of them, in a general way bears a legend," continued Senator Reed, "which I am going to copy into the record, to the effect that they can be used for the preparation of sauces, cakes, puddings, ices, desserts of all kinds, fruit juices and punches, and it further says it is very highly concentrated and that a one-ounce bottle is sufficient to flavor from one to two gallons of water or grapejuice. You have seen similar products and they are sold openly in the market are they not?"

"They are sold," replied Dr. Doren, "and I think in some cases rather openly."

"Well, there is no trouble at all about buying something to flavor your puddings and so forth," said Mr. Reed. "It is purely a temperance matter. Now, these are used by the moonshiner in the illicit producer or seller, taking these alcohols they manufacture and giving them a flavor in imitation of various brands of liquor; that is their purpose, or one of their purposes, is it not, outside of the puddings?"

"It may be so used," replied Dr. Doren. "But I doubt the extensive use of those imitations, largely in the nature of a fraud."

"All right," said Senator Reed. "Is not this bootleg whiskey that we get now regularly doctored up and that which you seize regularly doctored up with various flavors so as to give it as nearly as possible the taste of real whisky?"

"That apparently is the endeavor," the witness replied.

"Maybe you cannot get exactly the same twelve months for the comparisons we want, but you know what is wanted, and, I guess you will get it for us," said Senator Reed.

"Now, do you know about the production of grapes?" asked Mr. Reed.

"General yes; I know some figures," replied General Andrews.

Q.—Have you any figures either here or in your office which show the increase in production of grapes during the last three or four years A.—No, sir. I do not think we have. I think we have that, but I will look for it. Could not the Department of Agriculture give that to you?

Q.—If you have those figures or can get them I would like to have the production of grapes for the year before prohibition went into effect, and then for each year there after. I would like to have the prices. I do not mean for each variety. But the general price of grapes the same years. Can you tell the number of people that have been killed or wounded by prohibition agents? A.—Those figures I have not submitted.

General Andrews said he would put the list of killed, wounded, or otherwise injured, as a result of prohibition enforcement activities, in the record, but he did not do so today.

"I want both sides," said Senator Reed. "If you have had a war I want the casualties on both sides."

Senator Reed also wanted compiled the amount of liquors seized by the Federal authorities, the figures to include those of the Coast Guard.

Dealings With the Underworld.

"I have only one more question to ask," said the Senator. "You stated yesterday you bought information frequently from people who operated in and were connected with the underworld. I suppose it is not a necessary prerequisite to the sale of information that a man should have a criminal record?"

"Why, the vast majority of our information comes from friends of the law who give it to us without pay," General Andrews replied.

"Yes, but if there was somebody who came to you and if he did not have a criminal record and wanted to sell information you would buy it from him as readily as if he did have a criminal record?"

"Yes, although when I say record, I mean contact."

"And I know," said Senator Reed, "how some of these things are done. And I am not asking these questions in a critical sense at all. I am just trying to get at the facts. But of course I take it if you would purchase information from a man who had contacts with the criminal world, even though he himself had a criminal record, that if somebody came along who did not have a criminal record and offered to sell information you would pay it quite as readily in that case as you would in the former?

"You have never resorted yourself, have you, to the policy of trying to have neighbors spy upon their neighbors?"

"Why, Senator," General Andrews replied, "I certainly have not, nor do I think have any of my agents. I have tried to make it clear that our purpose is bigger than that."

"You do still have in your employ, do you not, some men who have criminal records?"

"I may have informants right now somewhere working in the force with criminal records, but I do not know that I have. I would not say I have not got them. I will not have them as prohibition agents, or any men who are in a position to act as law enforcement officers."

Ex-Convicts Were Dismissed.

"Have there not been prohibition agents duly commissioned who have had criminal records?"

"Well, I explained the other day it was done by their having lied in their answers to questions on the application, and then without our knowledge we innocently have employed such men in a few cases, and immediately dismissed them upon knowledge to that effect."

Senator Reed—Do you say these people who have contacts with the underworld, such as you spoke of on yesterday, are or are not used as witnesses? A.—No, sir.

Q.—They are never so used? A.—No, sir. They are used only as informants. And we do not use their information on which to get out search warrants, not directly, as I understand it. As I explained on yesterday, their information is given to us and then our agents, acting on that information, go out and get evidence.

Q.—How do they get the evidence so that they can swear out search warrants without having a search warrant in the first place to authorize them to get into a house? A.—They do not get in, in order to get a search warrant.

Q.—Then on what evidence do they make affidavit that entitles them to a search warrant if they do not go in the house and see for themselves? A.—Senator Reed, of what kind of case are you now thinking?

Q.—A search warrant case. A.—Well, a place that sells liquor or a place that manufactures liquor?

Q.—I am thinking of any case where you have to get information through one of these informers and you do not use the informer. A.—Well, then, we will say that it is a case of sale. We get information to the effect that they are selling liquor at a certain address in a city. One of our under-cover men—not the informer, because he must not be uncovered, as we say, nobody must know he is working for us—but some agent goes to that address and makes a purchase of liquor. Now, we have our evidence for a search warrant.

PROCEDURE IN STILL CASES.

"But suppose it is not a case of sale," said Senator Reed.

"Suppose it is a case of manufacture," General Andrews replied. "For example, we get information of a building in Brooklyn where they are distilling, or renaturing, as we call it, this denatured alcohol. We send there our regular agents to watch that place until they can get evidence of a truck coming out, or any one of things that would clearly demonstrate that the place was used for the purpose of manufacturing alcohol. Then those men go with their statement to the Commissioner and make affidavit and get a search warrant."

"Of course, that is a perfectly proper procedure," Senator Reed admitted.

"That is the way we use our information," said General Andrews.

"Do these people have criminal contact?"

"Of course, these people have contacts with the people you speak of," said General Andrews.

"But they have their contacts because they belong to the underworld, as you told the other day?"

"It does not necessarily mean," replied General Andrews, "that a man is a criminal in order that he may have knowledge of the underworld operations. My best man, for example, I know is not a criminal, but he has got very close contacts."

"Yes, he associates with the underworld?" asked Senator Reed.

"He does for the purpose of having knowledge of what is going on," General Andrews answered.

"Certainly, I suppose you have what are commonly known in criminal knowledge as 'snitchers,' that is, people who get in with the criminal element, and in that way undertake to learn who is manufacturing liquor, and sometimes they are engaged in the business themselves as a cover?"

"Well, not to any great extent," said General Andrews.

Q.—You have some of them? A.—Only in rare instances where the situation demands it. If you can conceive going into a city as involved as New York City and trying to get information of what is going on in that big city you may see at once the necessity of employing some kind of means to get information of what is going on.

Q.—I have had something to do with the enforcement of criminal laws myself. A.—Yes.

Reed Reverts to "Nosey" Women.

Senator Reed read a clipping from a Cincinnati newspaper in which it was stated that Thomas B. Jarvis of the Anti-Saloon League, on duty in that city, addressed the Hamilton County Woman's Christian Temperance Union, advised them "to associate with their neighbors who are not members, to discuss prohibition with them, and thus to ascertain whether the liquor laws are being violated in private homes."

The article further stated that Mr. Jarvis said what was needed were women who are sometimes called "nosey" and the "nosier they are," he was quoted as saying, "the better will be the results they get."

"Did you ever resort to anything like that?" asked Mr. Reed.

"Senator Reed, you know that I have not done that," said Mr. Andrews. "I am so far removed from anything like that that it is to me a joke."

"I thought as an officer and a gentleman you would repudiate that. You do not believe in that sort of policy, do you?" said Senator Reed.

"Why, it has nothing to do with enforcement of the Federal prohibition law," said General Andrews.

"Well, I thought that would be your position, and I congratulate you on it. I think that is all, General Andrews, and I am very much obliged to you."

MRS NORTON TESTIFIES.

Mrs. Mary T. Norton, woman member of the House from New Jersey, then took the stand. Describing her observation of prohibition and her experiences as a former welfare worker for fifteen years, she said:

"I have not been able to find any improvement at all. On the contrary, in a number of cases I have found that where men formerly drank they are now indulging in drugs.

"And as one woman told me, she had been suffering all her life from a drunken husband, but now she was suffering from a crazy husband as the result of drugs, because he could not find the kind of liquor he wanted. That has been true in three cases out of fifteen that I investigated."

"It is your opinion that the effect of prohibition has been to improve or to injure the morals of the people," Senator Reed asked.

"I would say absolutely," Mrs. Norton replied, "that it has ruined a great many of our young people, that their morals have been ruined as the direct result of carrying flasks to parties. I have seen a great deal of that, Senator, and it is because of that habit that I have been so intensely interested in this subject. If I thought for one moment that prohibition or the Volstead act was going to do what we had hoped, I would not be here today to advocate any change. But I have not seen any such results in any of the work that I have been engaged in."

Mrs. Norton read a letter concerning a veterans' hospital which said:

Bootlegging in Soldier Hospital.

"The clinical director has been visiting around in the hospital at night trying to influence the patients against (and he mentions a certain doctor), and the charges are that bootlegging has gone on in this hospital and has caused deaths, and the men who sold the poisoned whisky to the boys were caught with the goods, and yet the commanding officer failed to do anything about it."

Mrs. Norton said she did not think she could add much to the testimony already given dealing with the failure of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead law.

"I believe a great many men and women endorsed prohibition when it became a law of this country with the absolute conviction that it would promote temperance," she continued. "Many of these same men and women are now working for a repeal of the law they then advocated, because they realize it has been a failure and has set back the work accomplished through many years to make our country temperate.

"Prohibition and temperance have no relation to each other. You must have public opinion behind a law to make it effective. Therefore, it would seem that there is but one solution to the horrible condition in our country today, a condition which causes every thoughtful father and mother to wonder what will become of their children if the condition is not remedied.

"The solution lies in a referendum to the people and allowing them to decide definitely whether or not they are in favor of prohibition.

Letters From Worried Parents.

"My mail is filled with letters urging me to do everything in my power to modify the existing law—letters from fathers and mothers who realise their utter helplessness regarding their own children, realizing the temptations they are subjected to as a result of carrying flasks. You know what I mean, and if you do not I would refer you to the hospitals in our large cities, and you will find evidence sufficient to warrant the most skeptical to believe that prohibition is a failure.

"If the Anti-Saloon League is honest it must acknowledge that, whatever it had hoped to accomplish, the result is disastrous, and surely it should be open-minded enough to reverse its position, for the benefit of our young America.

"The only class of people in this country today who should be working for prohibition is the bootlegger.

"Some women, who are advocates of prohibition, have said that in some parts of the country there are many more children with shoes on their feet since prohibition was adopted. While I think the financial condition of the country and the splendid work done by the welfare organizations of today may have more to do with that than prohibition, nevertheless for the sake of argument—granting this to be true, I would like to ask which is more important, to keep the feet of a child warm or to safeguard its character and perhaps its very life.

Tennesseean Coins a Word.

A letter from J. D. Wyrick of Fountain City, Tenn., received and read by Mrs. Norton, said the writer, having made a six-year study "of the so-called dry game," was "in a position to furnish some damaging evidence why 'hell-hi-bition' should be lifted from the shoulders of the so-called free American people."

Mr. Wyrick declared the majority of enforcement officers in his section were "lower down than the lowest of those they arrest," that in many cases Sheriffs capture liquor and sell it to a bootlegger, and that the other officers then capture the bootlegger and the process goes on.

The writer recited cases in Knoxville where, he said, prohibition agents had acted in desperate fashion, and incidentally challenged Senator McKellar "to come to Knoxville and debate with me on the liquor game."

Lifting her eyes from the letter, Mrs. Norton said to the Senators:

"After reading this letter, it brings to my mind the little joke the Prince of Wales had at our expense when visiting us the other year. You will recall when the Prince was asked how he liked prohibition, he replied: 'Great; when does it begin?'"

KINDRED'S MEDICAL VIEWS.

Representative John J. Kindred of the Second District of New York followed.

"Of course, as to what is intoxicating from a scientific and legal standpoint you will have to rest upon what would intoxicate the normal person under normal conditions who had the usual stomach of the average human being, under the normal and usual conditions," said Mr. Kindred. "Taking into consideration this phase of the question, the normal adult human stomach would contain, under usual conditions, as a possible maximum from two to three pints, we will say, of the usual beer of 2.75 alcoholic content.

"My experiments on the occasion I refer to and subsequently have proven conclusively that the full capacity of such normal stomach under normal conditions would not intoxicate, or even exhilarate, more than would two or three cups of strong coffee or tea.

"Of course, the value of test rests further upon certain other conditions, but in these experiments which I actually made it has been proven conclusively that beer of 2.75 per cent. alcoholic content mentioned would not be unwholesome to the most of the people who would drink such beer under the usual conditions.

"I wish to state, in the first place, that my own personal attitude as a physician and law-abiding citizen with regard to the use of strong alcoholic liquors, meaning whisky, brandy and other stronger alcoholic liquors, is and has been that they should be used with great moderation and in proper quantities and under proper conditions.

"The Volstead law specifically permits the use of intoxicating liquors (meaning strong whisky and brandy of standard alcoholic proof strength) and also vinous liquors of 24 per cent. alcoholic strength for medicinal purposes, and it also permits the use of wines of more than one-half of 1 per cent. alcoholic content for sacramental purposes.

Points to Court Decision.

"This interpretation by the Volstead law of the real meaning of the Eighteenth Amendment clearly indicates that the use of intoxicating liquors for other than beverage purposes (namely for legitimate medicinal and sacramental purposes) is not a violation of any provision of the Eighteenth Amendment, but that it is in strict conformity with the spirit and intent of the Eighteenth Amendment.

"This is the very point involved in the litigation now pending, having been instituted by Dr. Alexander Lambert of New York and other physicians of national reputation. Two United States District Courts have already sustained the contention of Dr. Lambert and his associates, holding that the words 'for beverage purposes' in the Eighteenth Amendment did not and could not prohibit the use of as much intoxicating liquors by licensed physicians, as in their honest judgment was required in the treatment of diseases, which, of course, is for non-beverage purposes.

"Both the Volstead law and the amendments to it constitute a grave interference with the rights of both the physician and his patient, for whom he should at all times have the right to prescribe any drug or agent which, in his honest and good judgment, is really needed. Under the Harrison Narcotic Drug law and under all of the laws of the respective States intended to regulate the prescribing of dangerous narcotic and other drugs, the physician is permitted to prescribe most poisonous narcotic drugs under proper regulation; but he cannot, under the existing law, prescribe any beer of the weak alcoholic strength of from 3 to 6 per cent. How inconsistent and absurd."

MURPHY DESCRIBES SEIZURES.

Gerald P. Murphy, Deputy Administrator of the Prohibition Bureau of the District of Columbia, was the next witness. He is one of the men who came into office at the same time as General Andrews, in the Fall of last year.

Asked as to kind of stills he has been finding in the District of Columbia, he replied they ran all the way from little ones with one or two gallons capacity to the largest ones manufactured. Since October, he added, the local agents have not seized a single still of less than twenty-five or twenty gallons capacity.

"You are not looking for the little ones now," asked Senator Reed.

"We are looking for the small ones, but there is not much advantage in finding these small ones," Mr. Murphy replied.

Q.—Are you concentrating on the big ones? A.—There is not so much advantage in finding the small stills.

Q.—Did you ever see one of these cooking machines all hooked up? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Do you know enough about the business to know whether you can distil liquor in that thing? (Indicating a cooker on the table.) A.—No, sir. I would not really want to attempt to say.

Q.—Do you think you would have any difficulty if you attached a pipe to the top of that to condense your vapors in making plenty of alcohol in that apparatus? A.—If it is tightly sealed and the mash is put in there, the vapor will rise.

Q.—Look how beautifully this is sealed up with all these thumb screws. A.—I know it is, Senator Reed.

Q.—All you need to do is to hook a glass tube or any other thing on there to collect the vapors that come out of one of these exits and condense them and you have a still? A.—Yes; and later cool them.

Q.—So that, Mr. Murphy, you have to face these difficulties, and I want a frank statement from you of the fact. A man can take an ordinary cooking utensil and by fastening it up so that it will hold the vapors, and heating your mash or heating the sugar or other materials you can produce alcohol? A.—Yes, you can.

Q.—In any home? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Within a few hours? A.—No, sir; it would take at least four days before you could produce any alcohol in that.

Q.—You mean that you have first to sour your stuff? A.—You first have to ferment it.

Quicker for Home Product.

"That is to say," said Senator Reed, "you will take a can of this sugar, like I hold in my hand, and you put it in a jar of some kind and put some water on it and throw a cake of yeast in and it will take three or four days for that to ferment."

"Yes, sir, and after you have it fermented it takes three or four hours to get alcohol out of it. About four hours, according to conditions. If it was inside the home it would only take about three hours."

Q.—So that one of the problems that you gentlemen charged with prohibition enforcement have to face is the facility with which alcohols, perhaps of an inferior quality but nevertheless alcohols, can be produced in the homes with ordinary cooking utensils, and with perhaps a piece of pipe to condense the vapors? A.—Well, I would not say with ordinary cooking utensils, but with cooking utensils arranged so that that may be done.

Q.—You can do that with the old-fashioned teapot or coffee pot, can you not? A.—You can make alcohol, but you would have to wait longer when commercializing on it.

Q.—I am not talking about commercializing on it. No man today is commercializing on it until he has first satisfied himself. But if a family, now, and no joking at all, if the women in the house want to make a couple of quarts or a gallon or two of alcohol, whether they sell it or keep it—we are not concerned with that for the present—they will take an ordinary cooking utensil, with a pipe in which to condense the vapors, and they can easily reproduce two or three quarts of alcohol within a few hours' time after it has fermented. A.—After the four days for fermenting, yes.

Q.—And you know that is being done extensively, do you not? A.—In the District of Columbia?

Q.—Everywhere. A.—I only have to speak for the District of Columbia, and I do not think it is being done extensively here.

Q.—You do not? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Of course you do not get into very many homes. A.—Well, I am prepared to state that they do not stay in one place very long.

Q.—They do not have to, only four hours. A.—They have to stay there four days.

Q.—You mean in order to sour the stuff? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—There is no law on earth that would keep a woman from having five of six pints of sugar and putting it in a crock, and putting a cake of yeast in it and letting it stay there, in her kitchen, is there? A.—No, sir.

Q.—And then all she has to do in order to have a still working is to give it three or four hours to get the liquor out? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Now that is one of the difficulties you have to confront you, is it not? A.—Yes, sir; it is one of the difficulties.

Q.—That all of your force has to confront? A.—Yes, sir.

This concluded the examination of Mr. Murphy. Representative Hill thereupon took the floor and submitted the sworn statements of Representatives Collins, Carew, Berger, Cullen, O'Connor, Voight, Lampert, Easterly, Tydings, Schneider and Douglas. None of the statements, in which the authors gave their views as to why the law should be modified, were read. Other statements, said Mr. Hill, will be submitted before the conclusion of the hearings.

S. H. CHURCH HITS DRY LAW.

Samuel Harden Church, President of the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, was called.

"I can mention some acts of violence, even murder, which have been committed in Pittsburgh, I am sorry to say, by the Representatives of the United States Government," said Mr. Church.

"On yesterday when I was preparing to leave to come here one of the prohibition agents fired his revolver at a man, thinking he was a bootlegger and he might have been, so far as I know, but missed him and fatally wounded a seventeen-year-old boy standing on the sidewalk.

"Cases of forcible entry, outrage of one kind or another and even murder are almost of daily occurrence in our city.

"One of the things I should like to speak of, since Senator Reed has asked me to speak outside my prepared statement, is the conduct of the prohibition officers, the high officers in Pittsburgh, toward the student body there.

"We have in the Carnegie Institute of Technology of Pittsburgh, which is a department of the Carnegie Institute, some 6,000 students.

"Not far away is the University of Pittsburgh, with about 10,000 students and also not far distant is the Catholic University with a very large number of students and Mr. Baird has published widely an advertisement calling upon all these people to spy upon their associates and even to become informers for the benefit of the Government in the cause of prohibition.

Spying Urged on Students.

"Do you mean that the students were called upon?" asked Senator Reed.

"Yes, sir," was the reply.

"To spy upon each other?"

"Yes, sir," replied Mr. Church.

Q.—Who is Mr. Baird? A.—He is the Prohibition Commissioner of Pittsburgh, and I will say a man of very high character and integrity, but he has become infected by the spirit of bigotry which seems to grow on all officers of the character of Mr. Wheeler, and I might also say that he and Mr. Mayer, United States Attorney at Pittsburgh, are constantly urging upon this great student body, which are to furnish the brains of this country in a few years, to become spies and informers upon their own associates.

Senator Harreld—Do you think that all of the fanatics in the world are on either side of

Alumni Association at a luncheon on March 23 last, that everybody has all the liquor they want if they have the money to pay for it, that there are at this moment 10,000 stills operating in Allegheny County, which means Greater Pittsburgh, that there are on one street in the residential district of Pittsburgh seventeen houses where schoolboys of from 14 to 18 years of age buy small supplies of liquor to take with them on their skating and automobile parties, and that in spite of Mr. Baird's efforts to employ men of good character to do this work he discharges ten men every day because they succumb to the temptations of bribery and grafting or for other causes.

Denounces Raid on Restaurant.

"The Pittsburgh prohibition officers recently, at the dinner hour, invaded the Nixon Restaurant, a very decent place, and compelled all of the guests, a company of about 300, who, in the old-fashioned language, would be called ladies and gentlemen, to stand up while, with the manners of bandits, they passed their hands over the bodies of the men, and when some of the women protested, rudely pushed them back into their chairs. One man who demanded, 'By what law?' was struck to the floor. Some six or seven hip flasks were found among that large company, but no liquor was found in the restaurant itself.

"Two days later the insatiable agents returned and repeated the raid, finding nothing this time but a bottle partly filled with gin on the orchestra stand. The net result was nothing but the fright and sense of outrage on the part of the patrons and a distinct injury to the business of the proprietor. This incident is typical of the things that happen every day.

"When Mr. Baird accepted his present office he was a man who knew life in a liberal and generous way, but he has become infected with the fanaticism which seems to take hold of all the men who have charge of this oppressive legislation, for in a speech at the Point Breeze Presbyterian Church he declared that all bootleggers should be stood up against the wall and shot, and he has widely published an advertisement calling upon all the people to spy upon their neighbors, and, if necessary, go to telephones outside of their own districts and give him anonymously the names and locations where liquor is suspected so that they may raid the places.

Workman Slain As a Suspect.

"In one case a man named Dimitro Milaleszyn, carrying his dinner bucket in his hand, set off for work at the nearby mill in the gray dawn of morning, leaving behind him a wife and eight children who depended wholly upon his support. One of Mr. Baird's men named Joseph Tobasco saw him and with the instant thought that the dinner bucket was suspicious, without ordering him to halt, without a word of warning, Tobasco fired his revolver, killing an innocent and industrious and decent man, and plunging a large family into sorrow and poverty.

"The United States Attorney, John D. Meyer, is following in the footsteps of Mr. Baird, in advocating the spy system which has become such a detestable feature in our social life.

"He has asked the students of the University of Pittsburgh and of the Carnegie Institute of Technology to act as spies upon their associates, and when he was criticized for thus attempting to undermine the honor and decency of these young people he responded, as reported in the newspaper, that if necessary he would put a spy on every doorstep in Pittsburgh.

ILL PERSONS MADE VICTIMS.

"Some experiences within my own view will illustrate the situation under which all men suffer inconvenience, irritation and discomfort. My sister was desperately ill with influenza.

"We took her to the hospital and the doctor ordered a teaspoonful of whisky every hour to stimulate the heart. The nurse said the whisky there was from the drug stores and that the drug stores dilute it and poison it so that it would kill a horse. I said that I had some whisky at home that would not kill a horse and hurried home and got it, saying my sister's life, but making myself liable to arrest and the confiscation of my car.

"My eldest daughter has long been an invalid and she used to take a stimulant of French medicinal wine known as Dubonnet, a combination of port and quinine or something of that sort. She said to me: 'Father, if I could have a glass of Dubonnet wine I would get well, but no Dubonnet wine can be bought in all this wide world for use in America.

"A gentleman of France came with his wife across the ocean to visit the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburgh. Arriving at New York, his wife was seriously ill with influenza. The doctor ordered port wine to keep up her strength, but finding it impossible to obtain any port wine in New York, my friend took his wife all the way to Bermuda solely to give her this stimulant, and they finally arrived at Pittsburgh a month late.

"My chauffeur came to me last Sunday in great distress, saying that his little son was suffering from pneumonia and whooping cough and was not expected to live through the night and that the doctor had given him a prescription for whisky to cut the phlegm of the cough and keep the heart at work, but that after going to nine drug stores he had found it impossible to buy any whisky. I was glad to be able to give him some from my closet.

Takes Fling at Wheeler.

"On a recent voyage to Europe, when our ship had left New York and we had sat down for luncheon, I ordered a glass of Bass's ale. It was so good, so gently exhilarating after a year of hard work that I felt a sense of shame and pity that my country was cut off from such a beneficial and harmless beverage.

"The Anti-Saloon League and its impassioned followers have cut down the whole tree and brought confusion upon us all. The mercenary agitation of this grave question by Mr. Wheeler—mercenary because he gets a rich, and I am told an unaudited, living out of it—and the insensate rage of his crusading following, is setting up in this country a tyrant of law which from day to day is becoming more odious than those pitiless ogres who are real tyrants of history.

"They are making a kindergarten nation out of a people who want to be men and women, with all the liberties and responsibilities that go with the maturity of life. While the legislation now under consideration is inadequate to correct the great evils of prohibition, it marks the beginning of a movement back to national sanity, national decorum and national liberty.

"We have all more or less succumbed to the false doctrine that liquor is an unmitigated evil. Why not throw away timidity and hypocrisy and acknowledge that liquor is one of the greatest blessings that God has given to men out of the teeming bosom of our mother earth? The temperate use of liquors and the habit of drunkenness are terms that have no logical relation to each other. Relatively, only a few men who drink liquor have ever been intoxicated.

Favors Strict Control System.

"Liquor used temperately, as most men use it, is not intoxicating. We have all attended at dinners when wines all the way from claret to champagne have been generously served, and no man of decent manners has ever shown the slightest trace of intoxication.

"Millions of persons use liquors every day and never at any time in their lives become intoxicated. Hence it is true that no liquor is intoxicating unless it is misused. Upon this basis could not the Volstead act be repealed?

"What is wanted by liberal men and women with whose minds I have come in contact is a return to the old system without the saloon and with regulation left to the States, where high license, local option and other practical means of control will restore the nation to the very real habit of temperance which existed before this tragic blunder occurred.

"Judge Gray was right, and the Eighteenth Amendment ought to be taken out of the Constitution, leaving to Congress the power it already has to regulate interstate commerce, while restoring control of the subject to the States.

"I take my stand with the Founder of Christianity who drank habitually of those fine wines of Palestine, believing that they were an aid to health, and that, as at the marriage at Cana, they gave joy to life, until He says Himself that the Wayne B. Wheelers and the bigoted religionists of that day called him a winebibber."

Mechanic Tells of Stills.

Colonel Codman called as next witness John T. Callan of Baltimore, President of the Liberty Defense League and a member of the Maryland Legislature.

"As a house mechanic," said Mr. Callan, "or a man who supervises houses for real estate men, I am taking in on the average 250 houses a day. As a result of tha texperience I want to say that the real estate man of Baltimore today, the very first thing, asks a tenant, 'Are you a bootlegger?'

"That is because of the fact that we have had thirty-five or forty houses in our particular office practically ruined by stills exploding.

"It is a common occurrence that we will go to a house and find it completely wrecked where we thought would be a quiet home; or we will find pipes or hose run through holes in the walls and the side walls wrecked and the cellars filled with water. That is a condition we find quite frequently."

Senator Reed—What do you know about the habit of carrying hip flasks among the young people? A.—Well, in my visits to the socials and dance halls, and I am a member of such organizations, that habit is looked on with pride. We have to apologize nowadays for not drinking, due to the fact that it is made by a host who may be giving a special party and he wants you to test his ability to manufacture the stuff.

Q.—When you speak of that situation do you refer to hard liquors or to wines or to beers or to all of them? A.—I would say as to all of them.

Q.—All three of them? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Do you mean to say that now it has become quite a common custom for people to make their own liquors in their own homes in the City of Baltimore? A.—Undoubtedly.

Q.—Is the bootlegger there reasonably prosperous? A.—I would say very prosperous. They have the highest priced machines.

Q.—What in your judgment, from your observation, I mean, has been the effect upon the morals of the young people by prohibition? A.—Well, formerly, before prohibition if there was any drinking in a family it was done by the male head. Now we find it in at least 30 per cent. of every family, or 90 per cent. That is, of families that lean toward drinking. I would illustrate that in this way: My boy who is about 8 years of age, came in recently and said he would not play with a little boy who lived up the street because that little boy wanted him to drink whisky he had purchased at a candy store.

Stills in Nearly All Homes.

"Is that sort of condition common?" Senator Reed continued.

"It is," replied Mr. Callan, "if you will pardon me, in Baltimore City, where I am employed. In the tenement districts, where the houses are mostly rented, it is the exception when you do not find home brew apparatus and bottles—yes, bottles filled and ready for the next affair."

"What are those home brew apparatus? Are they big or little moonshine cooking utensil apparatus, or what are they?" asked Mr. Reed.

"They are just the ordinary washboiler," said the witness. "Some of them have a cooking pot with a top soldered on, and a little hole here and a little copper coil running through there."

Q.—And with that apparatus the housewife makes liquor in many instances? A.—Yes, sir; absolutely she does.

Q.—And the children are around there when she makes it? A.—Yes, in fact before prohibition the children would go out and play after school. They would run in and leave their books and go out to play. But now it seems they have to stay in and wash the home brew bottles. That may seem strange, but nevertheless it is a fact.

PERLMAN URGES MILDER LAW.

Representative Nathan D. Perlman of New York, the next witness, told of conditions in the Fourteenth New York district which he said was composed of very poor and also very rich people.

"Years ago" said Mr. Perlman "I was very active in literary and social organizations in settlement houses in New York, and have attended many social gatherings, dances of boys and girls clubs, and other meetings in the Social Settlement House. We found them temperate. But since prohibition I have attended many dances and social functions of clubs and settlement houses in New York City, and seen a great deal of drinking at those affairs.

"Boys and girls of today are drinking who never thought of drinking years ago. There are more people drinking today than ever before and a great many who never thought of drinking before prohibition times are now drinking out of resentment against the law. I will conclude by saying that I think you would have much better conditions in the way of temperance if you changed the law."

LINTHICUM VOICES PROTEST.

Representative John C. Linthicum of the Fourth District of Maryland followed Mr. Perlman.

"My feeling about this matter," he said, "is that the Anti-Saloon League in striking at the saloon struck too far, and instead not only of getting rid of the saloon, but trying to get rid of this whole situation, they have succeeded in making matters worse.

"I find in my city that before the prohibition act went into effect education was largely eliminating drinking throughout the country, and particularly, I might say, in Baltimore.

"Very few people indulged to any extent. If they had anything to drink they drank it in the open. Now I find them drinking in secret. If they give a banquet or if they go to a banquet, instead of having some drinks set out on the table and having them public and drunk openly, but not to any intoxicating extent, they have the drinks in some room or back somewhere.

"So that at nearly every place if you want to get a drink it can be freely secured, but it is in secret and not in public, which is very detrimental I believe, as some of the witnesses here have testified, that nearly all the young 'bucks' have to carry pocket flasks or else they are not popular. So one need no more than look in a Jeweler's window in any large city and see the great number of pocket flasks on exhibition to understand that a very prosperous business is being done in them, and that people are carrying them pretty generally.

"I am strongly in favor of a modification of the Volstead act. I should like to see us get back to some system by which we can regulate this matter."

CONNERY DEFENDS BEER.

Sworn before the committee, Representative William P. Connery Jr. of Massachusetts said that although a total abstainer since he was born, he was "absolutely, positively and heartily" in favor of a modification of the Volstead act.

"I believe in beers and light wines, and I believe that the alcoholic content allowed should be left to the States for decision," he stated. "I believe that hard liquor or whisky should be placed under Government supervision, especially when we know that in these days when a poor person needs liquor for medicinal purposes he is obliged to pay large sums of money to the druggist to get half a pint of whisky or half a pint of brandy, or a pint of whiskey or a pint of brandy which may be absolutely necessary for his use.

"And the liquor seems to be poorer and the price higher every year under prohibition in the United States.

"The rich have their pre-war liquor, which is good liquor, and from their standpoint they have everything they want in their own cellars. The poor working man wants his glass of beer, and when he had it he did not abuse the use of beer. He would probably take a glass of beer at a meal with his food, and he enjoyed that, and it gave him strength. But he cannot get it today."

Statements of other Representatives, some of whom were not present, were received into the record without their being read, whereupon the committee adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, when the drys will begin their battle to refute the evidence offered by the wets.

Schenectady, Frederick J. Slater and Arthur T. Pammenter of Monroe, Gordon C. Ferguson of Oneida, J. Maxwell Knapp of Sullivan and Theodore L. Rogers of Herkimer. There were others whose names were not learned.

Drys Are Wrought Up.

The drys in the Assembly, fully realizing the importance of this latest development, are greatly wrought up.

"A lot of so-called leaders of the party throughout the country have taken some of these fellows up on the mountain top," was the way one angry dry explained the visit of the fourteen Republican Assemblymen to the Speaker.

The conference between the Speaker and his fourteen Assemblymen lasted for some time. There was a full and free discussion of the referendum bill and the situation in all its aspects that has arisen around it. Speaker McGinnies told his callers frankly that he regarded the proposed referendum as altogether futile. He expressed the opinion that the vote cast in November for and against Senator Wadsworth and some other candidates would serve as well as a referendum in disclosing how a majority of the Republicans in this State felt on the wet and dry question.

The Speaker, however, admitted that the referendum might serve some purpose in that it would give to both wets and drys in the party the opportunity of expressing themselves on the prohibition question. But the effect of this, as he saw it, would be largely psychological. On voting machines questions submitted on a referendum are placed at the top and would be the first to engross the attention of the voter. Perhaps, Mr. McGinnies said, with their vote cast on the prohibition question, they might feel sufficiently appeased and not allow the issue to sway them in voting on candidates.

Wets Winning Converts.

It was learned tonight that the supporters of the Karle-Phelps proposal have made considerable headway in winning converts to their cause. Persons close to Speaker McGinnies admitted today that they did not feel at all certain that, powerful as he is, he would be in a position to control the situation. They thought there might be strategic reasons why the speaker would hesitate to have the Rules Committee report the bill and would favor a motion put from the floor with a view to taking it away from the committee.

The Speaker himself lives in a district which is bone dry and nearly all the Republican members of the Rules Committee represent dry constituencies. In view of the sentiments of the delegation that visited the Speaker, it is pointed out that should the Rules Committee be discharged from consideration of the bill after their refusal to report it they would be amply protected from criticism by their constituents. Furthermore, the assertion is made by some Republican supporters of the measure that in the end it probably will be found necessary to pass the bill to placate wet Republican voters in the large cities on the eve of a State election, and help out the candidacy of Senator Wadsworth.

Wish to Avoid Party Sanction.

Another reason why the committee might decide against reporting the bill was advanced by a prominent Republican leader. A favorable report from the Rules Committee, he maintained, would surround the measure with a strong semblance of party sanction with which legislative leaders who are of the Speaker's opinion are unwilling that it should be vested. They contend that the Republican Party in the State is still dry.

To let the modification bloc in the Assembly take the referendum bill away from the Rules Committee, on the other hand, would, as they see it, emphasize that it is not in any sense a party measure, even though Senator Wadsworth, the accepted leader, is in favor of it. They appear to make a distinction between party policy and the policy favored by the State leader.

Senator Wadsworth's Visit.

There was a report today that Senator Wadsworth, who is expected here on Monday afternoon, would arrive tomorrow instead and would spend the week-end at the capital. None of the legislative leaders, however, expect him until Monday, when he is to deliver a speech at a Republican dinner in Schenectady. The information of the leaders here is that Senator Wadsworth will go to his home in Livingston County for the week-end, possibly stopping off to pay a visit to George K. Morris, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, at the latter's home in Amsterdam.

The final battle over the Karle-Phelps bill will occur either at the night session on Monday or when the Assembly meets the following day. Assemblyman Phelps has served notice that he will move to discharge the Committee on Rules from further consideration of his bill on Monday night in the event that the committee should determine not to report it. Should the committee, on the other hand, decide to let the bill out, it will probably be on Tuesday's calendar.

Assemblyman Phelps declared today that he had a sufficient number of votes pledged to take the bill away from the Rules Committee and to see it through to final passage. With a favorable report on the bill from the Rules Committee, it is expected that at least eighty votes will be recorded in its favor when it comes up on third reading.

JERSEY MINISTERS AGAINST MODIFICATION

Thirty-six Episcopalians Tell of Disagreement With the Empringham Statement.

Thirty-six Episcopal ministers of New Jersey signed a statement yesterday that they desired "to dissociate ourselves absolutely from the pronouncement put forth by the Secretary of the Protestant Episcopal Church Temperance Society (the Rev. Dr. James Empringham) on the subject of the modification of the Volstead act." The statement also expressed the conviction of the signers that the Volstead act "should have a fairer and longer trial than it has yet had to prove its effectiveness."

Dr. Empringham, who was formerly New York State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, said on Feb. 3 that a questionnaire distributed among 20,000 members of the Church Temperance Society had disclosed that most of them believed prohibition had undone the work of fifty years of the temperance movement, and that many of its officers and directors, including Bishops, believed the Eighteenth Amendment had "sounded the death knell of temperance." The questionnaire, Dr. Empringham said, showed an overwhelming preponderance in favor of modification of the Volstead act.

The statement caused a sensation among Episcopalians. Bishop Manning of this diocese took direct issue with Dr. Empringham and the announced results of the questionnaire. Others have since declared that the Church Temperance Society neither sought nor received sanction of its views by any official body of the church.

The signers of the New Jersey statement made public yesterday, by the Rev. Samuel G. Welles of 104 Woodside Avenue, Trenton, were:

BUCKNER'S FATHER DISAGREES ON BEER

Nebraska Minister Insists Only Complete Prohibition Will Remedy the Situation.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., April 15.—Emory Buckner, United States Attorney in New York, is being criticized by his father, the Rev. J. D. N. Buckner, for his stand on light wines and beer. The father takes direct issue with the son and is not backward in saying so.

"When Emory was in Nebraska a couple of months ago and told me he thought light wines and beer would alleviate the situation in New York, I told him he was wrong," said the elder Buckner today. "I don't live in New York, but I feel Emory is mistaken, and I told him so. I told him the way to have prohibition was to have complete prohibition and prohibit the sales of liquors altogether. Emory is wrong."

SEIZE $40,000 DRUGS IN A RAID ON PIER

Customs Men Arrest Three After Finding Morphine Hidden in Oil Barrels.

Customs officials yesterday arrested three men and seized sixty pounds of smuggled morphine at Pier 3, Army Base, at the foot of Fifty-eighth Street, Brooklyn. The trade value of the contraband drug was placed at about $40,000, while the bootleg value was said to be well over $100,000.

The prisoners were arraigned later before United States Commissioner William J. Wilson and were held in $20,000 bail each for a hearing next Tuesday after they had pleaded not guilty. They were remanded to Raymond Street Jail in lieu of bonds. They are Salvatore Adamnasio, a cooper, of 108-32 Seventy-ninth Street, Ozone Park, Queens, having a place of business at 70 Harrison Street, Brooklyn; Salvatore Scozzari, chauffeur, of 113 Third Place, Brooklyn, and John Lavigne, chauffeur, of 445 Henry Street, Brooklyn.

Agents John McAdam, William Mangin, J. Van Wie and E. J. Starace of the Special Squad of the Customs Service and J. J. Lynch, a Customs Inspector, all assigned to watching steamers docking at the South Brooklyn waterfront, were at Pier 3 on Sunday when the steamship Portland Maru of the K Line arrived with a general cargo of merchandise from Mediterranean ports. Included in the list were a number of consignments of olive oil.

One shipment of twelve barrels excited the suspicion of the officials because the barrels were taller and more slender than those usually used for such a purpose. In addition they were made of much heavier material. The dozen barrels were taken on board the vessel at Palermo, Sicily, and were consigned to G. Bruno, Eighty-third Street, Brooklyn. Each was marked with identification initials of "G. B." in large letters.

An investigation proved that the name and address of the consignee were fictitious. On Monday the three men who were later arrested appeared at the dock and looked over the discharged cargo of the Portland Maru. They seemed particularly concerned about the twelve barrels. Yesterday they appeared again with a permit to remove the barrels, which were loaded on an automobile truck.

As the vehicle left the dock the agents seized it. Later the barrels were opened. They were found to be partly filled with olive oil. Inside of each barrel were two tin containers, each holding, according to the agents, the morphine in cube and powdered form. The men were arrested at once. It was said that one agent had been offered $150 to expedite the work of getting the barrels from the pier.

CONDEMN VOLSTEAD ACT.

Allied Business Men Send Protest to Senate Committee.

Pursuant to a resolution of the Board of Directors of the Allied Business Men's Protective Association, an organization of more than 8,000 New York City members, Joseph S. Schwab, its President, mailed yesterday to the Senate Committee on Judiciary the association's "unqualified condemnation of the so-called Volstead act and most emphatic protest against its retention upon the statute books."

Mr. Schwab stated in the letter that the conclusions of the association had been reached after an extensive survey of the liquor situation in this city and State and a careful study of the operation and effect of prohibition legislation. The letter continued:

"As business men and taxpayers we may be excused for stressing the tremendous economic waste inseparable from prohibition. Over $400,000,000 annually of revenue that would normally be derived from a proper regulation of the sale of wines, beer, &c., has been lost to the Government and diverted to the pockets of bootleggers without for an instant damming the ever-increasing tide of contraband liquor that floods the country. Prohibition has created the greatest traffic in illicit liquor in the history of the world.

"The business community views with alarm and apprehension the undeniable fact that the workingmen of the country, deprived of beer and wines, are resorting in large numbers to spirituous liquors. Whisky can be had by every one who has the price.

"Prohibition, by injecting religion into politics, strikes at the foundation of the Republic and sets a premium upon hypocrisy and cant. The Volstead act never has been enforced in any State of the Union. This association most earnestly commends to your committee the adoption of a recommendation to Congress for the repeal of existing prohibition enforcement legislation and the return thereby to the States of the regulatory power of which, it is respectfully submitted, they should never have been deprived."

ASKS MORE EVIDENCE IN WILLIAMS TRIAL

GENERAL DENIES CHARGE

But Subordinates Insist He Had Them Change Parts of Previous Statements.

MARINE BASE, SAN DIEGO, Cal., April 15 (AP).—A Rear Admiral seized the helm of the cocktail court-martial of Colonel Alexander S. Williams just as it was being steered into the port of final arguments here today and swung the case back into the stormy waters of testimony bearing on Brig. Gen. Smedley D. Butler's alleged attempts to browbeat his subordinates into saying Colonel Williams was drunk at the Hotel Del Coronado on the night of March 6 last.

Admiral Washington brought Brig. Gen. Butler back into the case a few moments after the Judge Advocate of the Court announced at the opening of today's session that he had no rebuttal witnesses and was ready to proceed with the arguments.

When court adjourned until tomorrow morning it was announced that the Admiral and his colleagues of the court-martial board had still other questions to ask of witnesses yet to be summoned.

Butler Denies Coercing Officers.

General Butler himself took the stand and denied categorically that he had coerced or attempted to coerce his subordinates into making statements that Colonel Williams was drunk. But the General was followed by other officers who swore they had changed essential portions of previous statements as a result of the General's warning that they "must come clean or you'll all get into trouble."

Captain Cates said he made one written statement of the Coronado cocktail episode at the request of General Butler in which he asserted he had seen nothing unusual in the Colonel's behavior except that he was "unsteady on his feet," but that after having been reprimanded by the General for "equivocating" he had prepared another statement containing the phrase "unsteady on his feet, which was caused by being drunk, sick or doped.'"

"The General called me into his office after reading my first statement," Cates testified, "and said:

"'Don't you know Colonel Williams was drunk? Well, I know he was drunk. I saw him take four or five drinks.

"'Now I want you to know you youngsters will have to come clean or you'll get into trouble also.

"'I know you are trying to be loyal to Colonel Williams and I respect you for it. But I want the truth about this.'"

Declares Statement Was Changed.

Second Lieutenant Beverly S. Roberts, said he and several others were called on the carpet by General Butler and told their statements were highly unsatisfactory.

"So, in my second statement," said Roberts, "instead of saying 'the Colonel's walk was unsteady' I wrote 'the Colonel had the appearance of being intoxicated or otherwise bewildered.'"

General Butler did not deny in his testimony that he had rebuked his subordinates for their "equivocating" statements on the subject of Colonel Williams's condition. He freely told the Court how he had called Captain Cates and others before him and roundly upbraided them for their hesitant narratives of what they had seen at the Hotel del Coronado.

"I told them they were a lot of boys running around in circles," he declared. "I said to them: 'Go out, now, and tell the truth, or you'll get into trouble too.'"

Asked by Admiral Washington if he had "used duress" in obtaining the second revised batch of statements from his subordinates, the General shot back:

"None whatever. I wanted no lies from them. I wanted the truth, and I meant to get it."

Butler Ready to Tell More.

At one point in his testimony General Butler seemed on the verge of blurting out something as yet unsuspected by those attending the court-martial.

"There is in my possession," he said, "certain knowledge, and I believe it is now proper that I should inform the Court.

"In the first place, sir, a lot of these young officers are very greatly embarrassed.

"They have, of course, a very unusual hesitancy to speak and there is in my possession——"

Hesitatingly the General proceeded. "There is in my possession——" Again he broke off his sentence. "I waited to see if it would come out naturally. It has not."

Here Admiral Washington interrupted the witness.

"General," he said, "I think the Court naturally takes cognizance of those matters. Confine yourself to the facts so far as you know them."

CELLER REPLIES TO SARGENT.

Representative Declares That Dry Law Is Not the People's Will.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Attorney-General Sargent's recent declaration before the Women's National Conference for Law Enforcement, that the prohibition law is the will of the people, was sharply criticised in a letter addressed to Mr. Sargent today by Representative Celler of New York.

Mr. Celler stated that "the people had nothing to do with the prohibition amendment." He insisted that there never was a direct vote on the subject and that the members of the Legislatures who voted to ratify, were, in most instances, not elected on the prohibition issue.

"It is the law of the land and must be obeyed, but it need not be respected," wrote Mr. Celler, who added that the Volstead act did not ban drinking for the reason that the rich, who bought stocks before its enactment, were allowed to use them.

"That is the rub; the poor man has no such stocks," said Mr. Celler. "When he makes his stuff and is accused, he resents the fact that the judge and the jury and the prosecuting attorney probably all drink."

Standard Oil to Burn Coal; Finds It Cheaper Than Fuel Oil

The Standard Oil Company of New York, one of the largest organizations in the petroleum industry, is converting the fireboxes at certain of its refineries to burn coal instead of fuel oil. This is being done because the company finds it cheaper to burn coal than oil at present, as the price of the latter has advanced in the open market during recent months. This switching from oil to coal, it was explained yesterday, takes place often in the company's plants, as they are constructed in a manner to enable the company to burn either coal or oil, whichever is cheaper.

The latest switch from oil to coal, however, was viewed as significant in financial circles yesterday, because the company can obtain its supply of fuel oil at primary prices. The fuel oil market along the Atlantic seaboard and at interior points has been strong for several months, due to recent changes in the industry. One such change has been the decline in crude oil production in this country and in Mexico. Another factor has been the larger amount of crude oil converted into gasoline. In former years, when the demand for gasoline was smaller, oil companies found it unprofitable to refine heavy crude oil for gasoline. Improved cracking processes, however, have now made the operation more profitable.

FINDS 686 NIGHT CLUBS LICENSED BY THE CITY

Quigley Will Confer Today With McLaughlin on Curfew and Stricter Control.

William H. Quigley, City Commissioner of Licenses, and Police Commissioner George V. McLaughlin are expected to confer today on a curfew hour for night clubs. Mr. Quigley revealed that 686 night clubs in the five boroughs operate under licenses granted by the city. He added that there probably were as many chartered social organizations operating under dance hall licenses granted by the State. Of the clubs licensed by the city, Mr. Quigley said, 260 were in Manhattan, 176 in Brooklyn, 75 in the Bronx, 110 in Queens and 45 on Staten Island.

Mayor Walker has said that 3 A. M. should be a reasonable curfew hour for all clubs, but it is understood that Commissioner McLaughlin considers 1 A. M. as a more appropriate hour because of police information that criminals gather in many of the clubs in the early morning.

Mr. Quigley said that clubs under private ownership usually got city licenses, but that social organizations holding dance hall licenses obtained charters from the State in the belief that State supervision was not so strict as that by the city.

The Police Commissioner was understood to have a definite plan for control over the night clubs which he would lay before Mr. Quigley to learn whether there were any legal barriers to it.

CRITICIZED BY MRS. PEABODY

Gen. Andrews Should Resign if Not Agreeing With Law, She Says.

BOSTON, April 15 (AP).—General Lincoln G. Andrews, in charge of national prohibition enforcement, should resign if he is not in agreement with the law he is set to enforce, in the opinion of Mrs. Henry W. Peabody of Beverly, Chairman of the Women's National Committee for Law Enforcement. Mrs. Peabody, who headed a delegation of women in support of the Volstead act at the Senate prohibition hearing, criticized today the manner in which the hearing was conducted.

"I voice a feeling of indignation and protest that at a hearing of the Senate Judiciary Committee the time for witnesses was consumed in repetition of questions on the part of the Senator from Missouri to prove the case against the present law," she said.

Commenting on the opinion of General Andrews that the sale of non-intoxicating beer under strict control would make enforcement easier, Mrs. Peabody said:

"General Andrews's statement explains in part the criticism of his department. If he is not in agreement with the law which he is set to enforce, he should resign. We were told during the convention, April 11 to 13, that the law is openly and constantly violated in Washington society and were urged to protest."

MAYOR AT SCHOOL DINNER.

Attends Gathering of Alumni of Old No. 3 With Other Officials.

Mayor Walker, Sheriff Charles W. Culkin and other officials who once attended Public School 3, at Grove and Bedford Streets, were among those who attended the thirteenth annual dinner of the B. D. L. Southerland Association, the alumni association of the school, at the Hotel Commodore last night.

Reviewing his career as a student there, Mayor Walker said, "There is no more beautiful sentiment surroundings any school than that hovering over old No. 3, which gave as good an education as any school anywhere could have done."

Alexander I. Rorke, former Assistant District Attorney, who also spoke, indulged in some pleasantries regarding the gift of Cedar King, a prize horse, to the Mayor. "I don't know whether they gave the Mayor the horse for his health or to get rid of him. You know Cedar King might turn out to be a Prince of Wales horse and the Mayor a Prince of Wales rider."

Sheriff Culkin was among the other speakers.

KIDNAP BULGAR REPUTIES.

Fascisti Leave Agrarians Stranded in the Country After Long Joy Ride.

PARIS, April 15 (AP).—A dispatch to The Matin from Sofia says that Bulgarian Fascists took M. Tomoff and several other Agrarian deputies from the Sofia-Vidin train, bundled them into an auto truck and took them for a long joy ride.

The Fascists abandoned the deputies in the open country and they had to walk eight miles to get back to the station.

Enraged over the trick played on them, Deputy Nicolas Borisoff interpellated the Government on the incident and the Minister of the Interior promised to make an investigation.

MAP FINAL PLANS FOR CHARITY DRIVE

PRELATE PRAISES THE WORK

In Appeal for Contributions He Cites the Wide Commendation Won by Probation Bureau.

One thousand Catholic clergymen and laymen from 329 parishes in the New York Archdiocese gathered for dinner at the Hotel Roosevelt last night to hear Patrick Cardinal Hayes give the final instructions for the annual Catholic Charities drive, which opens Sunday and will continue for a week. Last year the drive brought $959,689 from 249,943 subscribers in and around New York.

Cardinal Hayes emphasized "the importance of organization rather than a mere cry for money." With adequate organization in every parish, he said, the money would come of itself. He pleaded for a "democracy of charity, with contributions coming from one and all. For then the poor man who gives $1 has as great dignity as the man who can write a check for $100,000 without thinking about it."

The annual drive, he declared, brought as a "by-product" greater general solidarity among those of the Catholic faith. "In contributing," he said, "Catholics are making a contribution to the spiritual life of our city, our State, and our beloved United States. Your motto should be, in the words of Christ, 'Love one another as I have loved you.' Go forth and exemplify him in your work."

Copies of the Cardinal's Pastoral for the Catholic Charities Appeal, to be read from pulpits in the coming week, were distributed. In this he commended the Catholic Probation Bureau "in reconstructing the lives of those assigned to its care, amply attested in the recognition and commendation accorded by both public and private authorities, competent to judge of the results."

Martin Conboy, President of the Catholic Society, and Thomas J. Farrell, who also spoke, both urged that the Catholic Charities workers endeavor to increase the list of subscribers by 15 or 20 per cent. each year until the "saturation point" be reached. Mr. Farrell held that more young people should be induced to take an active interest. George MacDonald presided.

It was announced that 15,000 workers would begin the drive Sunday. The funds raised are distributed each year among 200 Catholic relief agencies, which have a total expenditure in excess of $7,000,000 annually.

HUNTINGTON PAINTINGS SOLD FOR $122,010

A Troyon, Bought for $80,000 in 1907, Brings $17,750—A Corot Is Auctioned for $25,000.

Paintings belonging to the collection of the late Mrs. Henry E. Huntington, removed from 2 East Fifty-seventh Street and sold at the Anderson Galleries last evening by order of her son, Archer M. Huntington, brought $122,010.

There were ninety-four paintings, including examples of the Italian Quattrocento, Cinquecento and later schools and also of the Barbizon, early Flemish, Dutch, modern French, South German and other schools.

A Corot, "Hauling in the Net, Twilight," brought the high price of the sale, $25,000, being bid in by Duveen Brothers. It is 32 inches high and 22 inches wide.

Duveen Brothers also bid in the Troyon, "Milking Time at La Celle" near St. Cloud, for which Mrs. Huntington paid $80,000 in 1907, for $17,750.

The same firm paid $2,900 for Mary Cassatt's "Portrait of a Girl with Dog," and $2,700 for another Cassatt portrait of the same child.

Ambrosius Benson's "Portrait of Marguerite of France" was purchased for $7,500 by Henry Reinhardt & Son for the Minneapolis Museum. It is inscribed on the back "Marguerite of France, Duchess of Savoy, wife of Emmanuel Philibert, Duke of Savoy." Reinhardt & Son also bid in for $2,150 Lancelot Blondel's "Madonna and Child."

The Bourgeois Galleries paid $4,900 each for two paintings of three panels each, both sets entitled Antiochus and Stratonice, in the manner of Matteo di Giovanni. E. F. Albee acquired Bougereau's "Mother and Child" for $4,700 and P. W. French & Co. paid $2,500 for a late Fifteenth Century double altarpiece by Albert Van Outwater.

CONVICTED OF MURDER IN LONG ISLAND INN

Second Degree Verdict Causes Surprise—Faces Trial Next Week for Another Killing.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., April 15.—A verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree was returned by a jury in the Nassau County Court this afternoon in the case of Karl Kieferle, charged with killing Mrs. Nellie Watson, one of the proprietors of the Three Hundred Club in Freeport.

The murder was committed on April 6. Kieferle will again face the court on Monday to be charged with the murder of Henry Koelhe, who, with Mrs. Watson, operated the roadhouse.

The jury required an hour to reach its decision. Court attendants and police who were in the court room expressed surprise at the verdict, as Kieferle had previously been pronounced sane by two alienists who testified for the prosecution, and Dr. J. R. Hunt, New York alienist, who testified for the defense, said that he believed the man knew right from wrong when he fired the shots that killed the two people.

District Attorney Elvin N. Edwards finished his questioning of Kieferle this morning. Kieferle admitted the two killings. When Frederick A. Coles, his attorney, asked Kieferle to point out the police and county officials in the court room he said had frequented the roadhouse and were served with liquor free of charge, the prosecution objected, saying this was a murder trial.

GIRL STRUCK BY AUTO, DIES IN HOSPITAL

Truck Kills Her in Street—Priest Critically Hurt in Crash Near Atlantic City.

Margaret Reardon, 8 years old, of 1,325 Second Avenue, died last night in Flower Hospital of injuries she had received several hours before when she was struck by an automobile at Third Avenue and Sixty-eighth Street. Simon Peterson of 59 South Second Street, Brooklyn, the driver, was locked in the East Sixty-seventh Street Station on a technical homicide charge.

The clergyman received a fracture of the skull and internal injuries. TELLS OF FORMATION OF RADIO CORPORATION

Engineer Says at Inquiry Three Competitors Failed After the Merger Was Effected.

A deadlock over patents led to the formation of the Radio Corporation of America in 1921, according to J. V. L. Hogan, an engineer formerly with the National Signal Company, who testified yesterday in the Federal Trade Commission's inquiry into an alleged $2,000,000,000 radio "trust." The hearings are being conducted before Examiner William C. Reeves at 45 Broadway.

Mr. Hogan gave an indication of the growth of the radio industry by revealing that his company, known in 1920 as the International Radio Telegraph Company, had in stock only 5,000 audion radio tubes. In that year, he said, the company was absorbed by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company. Last year the Westinghouse sold 6,000,000 similar tubes, he asserted.

Three competing radio companies failed, Mr. Hogan testified, soon after the formation of the Radio Corporation merger. They were the Cutting & Washington Wireless Company, with a station near Sayville, L. I.; the Radio Communication Company, with one station for intercity business in New York and a ship-to-shore station at Jamaica, Queens, and the East Coast Fisheries Company, with a station at Rockland, Me. The Independent Wireless Telegraph Company is the only one which still does business in competition with the alleged two-billion-dollar "trust," Mr. Hogan declared.

Mr. Hogan was the only witness examined at yesterday's hearings. The inquiry will be resumed next Tuesday at 10 A. M.

SHOWS LEITER DREW $347,750 AS SALARY

Accountant Asserts Trustee Had Amount for Seventeen Years Though Mines Were Losing.

CHICAGO, April 15 (AP).—The first serious dispute between counsel in the suit of the Countess of Suffolk and other heir-trustees of the Levi Z. Leiter estate to remove as trustees Joseph Leiter, a son, and William Warr, an appointed trustee, developed today.

William Beck, public accountant, who examined the Leiter coal properties at Zeigler, brought out that for seventeen years Mr. Leiter drew an annual salary of $347,750 while the mines were running at a loss.

He then introduced the affairs of the Zeigler stores. Former Judge Cook asked Mr. Beck how much of the profits of the Zeigler Coal Company went to Mr. Leiter personally from 1906 to 1925. Defense counsel made an objection, which was sustained after a prolonged and heated debate before the court.

The close of the day's session was enlivened by the appearance of a deputy sheriff with court summonses for Lady Marguerite Hyde, Joseph Leiter, Nancy Colin Campbell and William Warr. Refusal of the heirs to pay $26,250 in real estate commissions was alleged.

TO MORTGAGE CLUBHOUSE.

The New York Athletic Club got an order from Supreme Court Justice Mahoney yesterday approving its application to mortgage its club property at Sixth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street for $500,000, to apply on the purchase of the new property at Seventh Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street. The proceeds of this mortgage, which is in addition to a mortgage of $500,000 on the old club property, are to be used to pay off mortgages on the new property. Demolition of the old clubhouse will begin on Oct. 1 and the new quarters of the club are expected to be completed in July, 1928.

The petition said that the value of the remaining real estate owned by the club is $5,250,000 and its personal assets are $462,670. Debts for notes and current bills are $240,000, and in addition to the present mortgage on the old club property there are mortgages of $2,805,000, $700,000 and $291,950 on the new site.

ART THEATRES SEEK A CLEARING HOUSE

OTTO H. KAHN IS ADVISER

Plans for a clearing house to assist the so-called "art theatres" in solving their financial and production problems—an extension to the theatre of the federation plan now applied to charities—were discussed yesterday by Manny Strauss, originator of the idea. A preliminary meeting of representatives of the Actors' Theatre, the Greenwich Village Theatre, the Stagers, and the Provincetown Playhouse already has been held, and plans will be further crystallized at a dinner at the Hotel Astor on June 3, under the chairmanship of Otto H. Kahn.

The plans as outlined, go beyond the four producing groups named. It is hoped to establish a national centre for information about independent theatres, their plays, methods of production, and administration and financing problems. The immediate aim, however, is to further the financing plans for next season of the existing progressive theatres of New York. Among the persons already invested, besides Messrs. Strauss and Kahn, are David A. Ansbacher and H. Love

Views of Mr. Strauss.

Mr. Strauss said:

"There has been a remarkable increase in the number of independent theatres, and in the number of fine plays they are bringing to New York; and there has been an increase in the number of business men who have realized the importance of these theatres to the future of the country and have been willing to support them. But there has been no adequate agency to bring together the producing and supporting groups.

"The theatre artists have found themselves hampered in their creative work and their groups disorganized because they had to turn their energies to financing activities, with which they were unfamiliar. They not only have lost time from their art, but their lack of knowledge of the methods of underwriting has made them lose many prospective supporters who might have been interested if the facts had been properly presented.

A Saving for Everybody.

"With this in mind, some of us have come to the conclusion that a saving can be effected for everybody concerned if a clearing house is established, this clearing house to centre the information about independent theatres and to help each group to help itself. Naturally we must move slowly in suggesting different ways of financing, but ultimately we feel sure, the methods can be stabilized and the sources of support widened.

"It should be especially kept in mind that the clearing house will not be a collecting agency for any one producing organization, but will make its services available to help in the work of establishing any group after its budget has been examined and found sound, and its objects proved to be of a practical-idealistic sort. The clearing house organizers realize that endowment or underwriting must not interfere with the individuality or autonomy of any group, or carry the privilege of interference in its artistic policy or practice.

"No incorporation actually has been formed, but the first steps have been taken to incorporate an 'Independent Theatre Clearing Committee.' Henry Alan Johnson has had charge of the legal steps, and we have had the co-operation and advice of Otto Kahn throughout."

FAREWELL BY OPERA STARS.

Ovations at the Last Performance of "Die Gotterdammerung."

The season's second and last performance of "Die Götterdämmerung" and the thirty-first representation of Wagner, whose works overshadow once more even the popular novelties in an international list, filled the Metropolitan to the doors last evening from 7:30 o'clock until midnight. Mmes. Larsen and Branzell and Mr. Laubenthal shared the curtain calls at the first of the music drama's two intermissions. Larsen and Laubenthal bowed with Bodanzky at the close.

Bohnen and Schützendorf sang the last of the Nibelung line and Schorr and Miss Mueller the Gibichungs, while Miss Kandt among the Rhine maids and Mme. Roeseler among the Norns were others of the German contingent taking leave for the next six months or more. Before the final act and again at the close of the long evening there were repeated demonstrations by both the regular Thursday subscription audience and their reinforcements from the more devoted Wagnerians.

Mr. Bodanzky conducted the superb and sombre score, with its recapitulations of character and motive from the musical warp and woof of the "Ring" tetralogy, and its unique and classic culmination of ultimate tragedy. It was possible at moments to say again of Wagner that "the statue was in the orchestra, the pedestal on the stage." But personal consideration of departing stars prevailed in the end, when the artists in frankly human fashion enjoyed their midnight ovation and gave back smiles and promises to "come again next year."

MUSIC NOTES.

Walter Damrosch cabled from Europe yesterday to George Engles to "deny emphatically" a London report of the New York Symphony inviting Richard Strauss to conduct there next season at $1,500 a performance. Mr. Damrosch's message said he had "made Strauss no offer whatever."

Maurice Frank's New York Civic Opera Company concluded its Southern circuit yesterday at Charlotte, N. C. Among the artists of the tour were Carmela Ponselle, Leta May, Lois Ewell, the Misses Aves, Kurkjian and Yaro, Messrs. Snyder, Sciarretti, Gandolfi, Martino and Valenti.

Commencing next Monday night the Gavrilov Ballet Revue, at the Princess Theatre, will have its rising curtain at 8:30 instead of 8:45, as is now the rule.

The Symphony Society of the Y. M. H. A. holds a seventh free concert in its hall at Ninety-second Street and Lexington Avenue on Sunday evening. The soloist is Mrs. Daverah Cohen, and the conductor A. W. Binder.

The first rehearsal of the American Symphony Society was called last evening in Public School No. 63, at East Fourth Street and First Avenue.

A concert of the Brooklyn Saengerbund took place at Bushwick High School last evening under the auspices of the Board of Education.

London Soon to Have Theatre For Broadcasting of Plays

LONDON, April 15 (AP).—London will soon have a theatre where plays will be staged for broadcasting and not for the benefit of audiences.

An attempt was made recently at Covent Garden Opera House, where an opera was performed and broadcast, there being no stage setting or costumes used.

The public was admitted to the performance for a small amount, which, however, defrayed the cost of the production, which has therefore recommended itself to broadcasters.

Money or His Life.

RED DICE, with Rod La Rocque, Marguerite de la Motte, Ray Hailer, Gustave von Seyffertitz, George Cooper, Walter Long, Edythe York, Clarence Burton, Charles Clary and Alan Brooks, adapted from Octavus Roy Cohen's novel, "The Iron Chalice," directed by William K. Howard. At the Broadway.

A picture in which there is a good element of suspense and competent acting is at the Broadway. It is called "Red Dice," and is faintly reminiscent in theme of Stevenson's "Suicide Club," inasmuch as the indomitable hero, Alan Beckwith, agrees to die on a certain day in return for $300 which he then sorely needs. The insurance on his life, a matter of $100,000, is made out in favor of a wealthy bootlegger, Andrew North. This Mr. North, not being particularly scrupulous as to how Beckwith comes to his end so long as his body is not lost, sees to it that Beckwith is followed by a comic gunman, who is to put a bullet through Beckwith a second after midnight on a Christmas morning.

This production was adapted from Octavus Roy Cohen's novel, "The Iron Chalice," and was translated to the screen by Jeanie Macpherson and Douglas Doty. It has been handled with a sense of humor, so that the comedy prevails throughout, and even the comic gunman's allusions to Beckwith, as his "corpse," are not tragic. North insists that, to avoid suspicion, Beckwith shall marry a woman whom he, North, is to choose. This marriage adds to the suspense and furnishes romance.

Squint, the sobriquet under which the gunman goes through life, endeavors at every moment to put a little cheer into his indelicate mission as murderer. That he is careless with his aim when the dreaded Christmas morning arrives, is to be anticipated, but Squint, at any rate, wounds his man.

Rod La Rocque is capital in the rôle of Beckwith and Gustave von Seyffertitz gives an excellent performance as the scoundrel, North. Marguerite de la Motte is prepossessing and capable as Beverly Vane, the heroine. George Cooper delivers some queer comedy as Squint, the fellow who takes his job as gunman fairly seriously, but looks upon life as something that sooner or latter has got to be snuffed out by a bullet. The title of this production was suggested by the dice North carries with him in a leather case and by which he determines the date on which his victim must face death.

'BY THE WAY' SHOWS ITS SPRING EDITION

Bright New Numbers and Songs Make English Revue More Enjoyable Than Ever.

"By the Way" fell victim to the vernal urge last night and despite the frosty weather blossomed out at the Central Theatre with a Spring edition, which in advance was rather ambitiously declared to be 60 per cent. of a new revue. Careful auditing showed that this figure was a trifle high, as only four of the twenty-one numbers are entirely new, although, in addition, at least three songs have been inserted in the present entertainment which were not in the initial production.

These few changes, however, have been all for the good, for the present "By the Way" is even more consistently amusing than its predecessor and unquestionably the logical and worthy successor to the first revue presented in this town by M. Charlot two seasons ago.

As to the new numbers, there is "Passing the Time," a moderately diverting sketch by Harry M. Vernon and Arthur Wimperis, which is played particularly well by Cicely Courtneidge and Jack Hulbert. Then follows "The Title Triangle," one of those interludes in which the dialogue consists of all the titles of plays that have been seen in New York for the previous two or three seasons and which is as amusing as most skits of its sort. "Seeing Is Believing" has to do with an English Colonel who doubts not his own eyesight when he sees his Lieutenant about to mount the guard without his sword, only to become confounded to find, when he calls the Lieutenant before him for an explanation, that the latter has the necessary accoutrements, having borrowed the Colonel's sword a second before. "You Modern Girls" is engagingly sung and danced by Harold French and what is probably the most comely of current Broadway choruses.

Any revue which had "The Beauty of the Bath," presented as it is by Celia Glynn, Harold French and Charles Courtneidge; "Greek as She Is Taught," which Miss Courtneige and Mr. Hulbert still make the best fun of the evening; "The Elopement," the presentation of hilarious backstage goings-on during the course of a thrilling radio melodrama, and "Castles in Spain," would be started on the road to success. All these hits of the first show are still in "By the Way," which makes up in its entirely British character more than it loses by its un-American finales and production numbers.

Mr. Hulbert, the charming Miss Courtneidge, the radiant Miss Glynn and other favorites of the company were accorded an ovation on their appearances last night, and they all deserved it.

HIGH STANDARD OF FILMS PRAISED

LAW CALLED UNNECESSARY

L. F. Hanmer Declares Manufacturers Are Trying to Do Their Duty to the Public.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Representatives of organizations favoring Federal regulation of motion pictures entering interstate commerce, appeared today before the House Committee on Education in support of the Upshaw-Swope bill which provides for the licensing of shippers of films as a condition to the shipment of their wares from State to State. Most of today's witnesses assailed proposals for Federal censorship of motion pictures, asserting that the industry itself as well as the public was effecting a steady improvement in the character of screen exhibitions.

A dissent from the latter conclusion was expressed by Mrs. Howard Bennet of Maryland, who declared that the "czars" of the film world had defaulted on their pledges to improve the standard of their product. Mrs. Bennet quoted Archbishop Curley of Baltimore as having said that motion pictures were often destructive rather than constructive and that they had very little effect in uplifting morals.

Opposing the principle of Government regulation, Lee F. Hanmer of the Russell Sage Foundation declared that if those who were urging such legislation knew the real story of "movie" development they would acknowledge that they were calling for something unnecessary. He said that the men responsible for the American motion picture industry, which produced 85 per cent. of the world output, were aware of their responsibility and were putting forth their best efforts to carry out to the fullest their duties to the public. He said that the people were opposed to official censorship of pictures, and he cited in support of his argument the Massachusetts referendum where this form of State censorship was defeated by a vote of 553,173 to 208,252.

The Rev. William Sheafe Chase of Brooklyn told the committee that the Upshaw-Swope bill proposed regulation and not censorship. Referring to the results of the Massachusetts referendum mentioned by Mr. Hanmer, Canon Chase said the arguments used against State censorship there was that the work could be done more effectively by the Federal Government. He said that the bill guarded against political domination of the board that it proposes to create.

"I do not stand for national censorship," said the Rev. Dr. Frank Jenson of Chicago, Vice President of the Motion Picture Council of America. "I stand for national regulation of the industry," Dr. Jenson added that the legislation recommended would benefit all interested with motion pictures as well as the public generally.

Representative Tydings of Maryland, a member of the committee, said he was not opposed to censorship of moving pictures, but that if such a plan were adopted it should be enforced by the States and not by the Federal Government. Mrs. Florence Kahn, Representative from California, also a member of the committee, said the States were fully protected in this matter by the Federal law prohibiting the shipment of immoral and indecent films in interstate commerce. The hearing will be resumed tomorrow.

'MIRACLE' FOR EXPOSITION.

PHILADELPHIA, April 15.—Mayor Kendrick today received Morris Gest at City Hall and thanked him for his tender of the production of "The Miracle" as a feature of the Sesquicentennial Exposition, which opens here in June. Mr. Gest was accompanied by a committee headed by Dr. Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The plan calls for performances at the Metropolitan Opera House for five weeks, beginning Oct. 4, with a cast including, at various times, Lady Diana Manners, Elinor Patterson, Rosamund Pinchot and Iris Tree.

On the committee of Philadelphians who are cooperating are Mrs. Samuel T. Bodine, W. Curtis Bok, Mrs. Edward W. Bok, Clifford Cairnes, Charles S. Caldwell, Mrs. Joseph M. Gazzam, the Right Rev. Thomas J. Garland, Episcopal Bishop of Pennsylvania; Albert M. Greenfield, Mrs. John Gribbel, Charles C. Harrison, Dr. Charles D. Hart, Craig King, Alexander Lieberman, Mrs. Campbell Madeira, G. Heide Norris, Dr. Hubley R. Owen, Thomas Ridgway, Countess Santa Eulalia, Caroline Sinkler, Edgar Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice J. Speiser, John J. Sullivan, Paul Thompson, Dr. Herbert J. Tily, Samuel P. Wetherill, Joseph Willing, Mr. and Mrs. Charlton T. Yarnall and Harold Ellis Yarnall.

A Testimonial to Jack Rose.

Many well-known players will appear at the Winter Garden on Sunday night at a testimonial performance to Jack Rose, prominent as a comedian, who is now recovering from a serious operation in Roosevelt Hospital. Mr. Rose has been master of ceremonies at the Winter Garden Sunday night performances throughout the season.

Those who will take part in the testimonial performance will include Al Jolson, Willie Howard, Jack Hulbert, Cicely Courtneidge, Will Mahoney, Tom Burké, Moran and Mack, Van and Schenck, Harry Delf and Sam White and Eva Puck.

An Acknowledgment.

THE NEW YORK TIMES acknowledges receipt of a contribution of $2 from "J. G." for the relief of the widow and three children of a man who was drowned April 4 and for whose family an appeal was made recently by the Brooklyn Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor.

ASKS CITY TO HELP STATE HOUSING AIMS

Reigelman Tells Republican Committee Tax Exemption Will Spur Building.

NEW ALIEN BILL FAVORED

Curran In Address Calls the Present Restrictive Measure "Inhuman."

The success of the State's effort to remedy housing conditions as embodied in the Nicoll-Hofstadter bill will depend upon the personnel of the State Housing Committee to be appointed by the Governor and whether the City Administration helps with tax exemption, Harold Riegelman, Chairman of a special committee on housing, told his fellow-members of the New York County Republican Committee at a meeting in Bryant Hall last night.

The County Committee approved the report of the Housing Committee and adopted resolutions urging Congress to pass the Wadsworth-Perlman bill to amend the immigration law to permit made immigrants here before the passage of the law in 1924 to bring in their wives, children and aged parents, regardless of the immigration quota, and to pass the Dyer anti-lynching bill, which would make mob lynching a Federal offense.

Mr. Riegelman said that the Nicoll-Hofstadter Housing bill had received the approval of Governor Smith and that its enactment into law was expected.

Says All Depends on Board.

"The first condition to the attainment of successful results is a trained, balanced, public-spirited State Housing Board, chosen solely with regard to experience, vision, brain power and zeal," he said. "The choice is up to the Governor. The machinery of the housing law will not work unless the public has complete confidence in the men who run the machinery.

"The housing law cannot produce results without the cooperation of the City Administration. It must be remembered that taxes are a substantial factor in re ts. The housing law permits but does not require municipalities to exempt housing projects from local taxation, and unless the municipality exempts such improvements from taxation it will be virtually impossible to build housing facilities in the congested areas which can be rented within the maximum amounts fixed by the act. Without the cooperation of the city in this respect the legislation will be fruitless in our five boroughs.

"If the City Administration helps with tax exemption, it may go one step further with telling effect. It has the right, when it condemns property for certain public purposes, to take more than such purposes actually require and sell the excess. This is called excess condemnation. The city may with entire propriety dispose of such property to limited dividend housing companies. It also may undertake to condemn and replan some of the worst sections of the city and arrange with limited dividend housing companies to replace the condemned dwellings."

Curran Offers Allen Proposal.

Henry H. Curran, who offered the resolution endorsing the Wadsworth-Perlman bill to amend the immigration law, declared the present law which separated families was "inhuman," and said the bill was to correct an error. Saying that he favored restricted immigration, Mr. Curran asserted that his experience as Commissioner of Immigration had convinced him that the passage of the bill would be an act of justice. "America is now keeping wives away from husbands," he said.

Mr. Curran criticized the State Department for having presented estimates that 600,000 persons would be admitted if the bill were passed. He declared this a gross exaggeration and propaganda against the bill. The true number, he said, was about 40,000.

Former Representative Isaac Siegel, seconding the resolution, attacked the immigration law generally and said that it had been devised mainly to exclude persons of one religion.

There was but one indication of the insurgency in the County Committee. That was when Harry Mack of the Ninth Assembly District offered an amendment to the rules providing for a roll-call of members from any Assembly district when the vote of that district was challenged. This was a sequel to the meeting last month when a report exonerating Samuel S. Koenig, County Chairman, from charges made against him by David B. Costuma was adopted by a large majority with each Assembly district leader announcing the vote from his district. Mr. Mack's resolution was referred without debate to the Executive Committee.

OUR HOTEL MEN AID SHAKESPEARE THEATRE

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 15.—The governors of the Stratford-on-Avon Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, according to a statement issued by Archibald Flower, Chairman, wish to get the best architectural advice the world can give in rebuilding the burned structure.

Steps have been taken, he states, to enlist the services of a strong advisory committee of leaders in art, architecture, literature and finance. The President of the Royal Institute of British Architects has already consented to act and has advised that the design for the new building be thrown open to public competition.

"A very large auditorium," says Mr. Flower, "is not our aim. Shakespeare calls for intimacy as well as breadth. On the foundations of the old building a low and more pleasing structure can easily be constructed to provide the much-needed conference hall and space to exhibit many objects of great interest in connection with the history of the stage.

"To achieve the object of making Stratford festival performances the finest in the world, as they should be, a fund is necessary for the establishment of subsidiary companies to cultivate a general love of Shakespeare further afield than Stratford-on-Avon, to furnish actors for the festival company and for long-term engagements of artists of international reputation.

"There is," he says, "a crying need for a theatre which will give to the world performances of Shakespeare comparable to the Wagner performances at Bayreuth."

King George has announced his willingness to become a patron of the new theatre.

American and Continental members of the International Hotel Alliance, who are visiting England, spent two hours and a half at Stratford today.

The Mayor informed them of his hopes that the United States would contribute to the theatre fund. Edward M. Tierney, Chairman of the American delegation, thereupon announced that the delegates would subscribe $1,000.

Thomas D. Green of the Hotel Woodward, New York, undertook the mission of conveying to America a faithful reproduction of the fourteenth century sanctuary knocker on the western door of the Shakespeare church. The reproduction was made for a church planned for Brooklyn.

SALOME ANGERED BY BRITISH CENSOR

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 15.—Because he wanted her to wear more clothes in the rôle of Salome, Frances Carson would like to have the head of the Lord Chamberlain served to her on a platter. The American actress indignantly refused last night to wear a shawl offered by the producer as a result of the Lord Chamberlain's order. She is appearing here in "Katerina," by Andreyev, at the Barnes Theatre.

"The Lord Chamberlain has said I must wear my dress down to my knees," Miss Carson said today. "As all our modern dresses reach above the knees, this strikes me as something exceptionally absurd. In plenty of other London plays girls wear much fewer clothes than I. If I used this shawl, the effect would be worse than that of the criticized garments. I designed the dress myself and thought it really far too modest for the scene. I really was surprised when the request was made. I feel very much inclined to play the part one night in Elizabethan dress, with flowing collar, and to wear a placard telling the people that I am meant for Salome."

The Bishop of London has been invited to see "Katerina," and Miss Carson hopes he will like her clothes better than the Lord Chamberlain does.

WOMAN BISHOP CALLS FOR FASHION REVOLT

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 15.—Londoners are fast being driven to the conclusion that this is the open season for two classes of American visitors—millionaire eccentrics and women evangelists.

Mrs. Alma White, head of the "Church of the Pillar of Fire," said to be the only woman Bishop, arrived in England today on the President Harding to combine missionary work with business during a two months' stay.

Standing on the platform of the Paddington Railway Station, amid the roar and rumble of trains, she told the assembled newspaper men how she came to form the Church of the Pillar of Fire and how she received inspiration from Heaven to prophesy the election of Warren G. Harding to the Presidency at a time when he had not even been nominated.

Asked if there was an Archbishop in her Church, she replied:

"If there is, I am she. My word is final. What I say goes."

"We go on a faith basis," she continued, "and we depend on free-will offerings. But we are well known. I rarely have to pay railway fare in America, and never more than half fare."

The woman Bishop does not think much of women's fashions, but she blames the other sex for them.

"Cruel, I call them," she said, "and the men are to blame, because they make them. The women should revolt.

"Look at what I saw on the boat. Bare backs enough to give a girl pneumonia. These things go back to the Dark Ages."

As for bobbed hair, she said:

"Of that the Scripture sayeth that short hair is a shame unto a woman."

"Marilyn" in Aid of Welfare Fund.

A musical comedy entitled "Marilyn" will be staged at the Lyric Theatre on Sunday night, April 26, in aid of the welfare fund of the Corporal Sydney Rosenberg Post, No. 670, of the American Legion. The book and lyrics of "Marilyn" have been written by Arthur Swanstrom, with additional lyrics by Robert A. Pines, a member of the post, and music by Carey Morgan. The cast will be headed by professional players.

'The Book of Job' at Free Synagogue

There will be two performances of a dramatization of "The Book of Job" on Sunday in the Synagogue House of Free Synagogue in West Sixty-eighth Street.

BEATRICE SWANSON TO WED.

Actress in "Artists and Models" to Marry Anders C. Ostergran.

Beatrice Swanson, one of the Swanson sisters, well-known in musical comedy and now appearing at the Winter Garden in "Artists and Models," will be married next Monday to Anders C. Ostergran of this city. Miss Swanson will retire from the stage.

The ceremony will be performed at 4 o'clock in the afternoon at the Marble Collegiate Chapel, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street. It will be followed by a dinner and dance at Sherry's, and the couple will sail on the Majestic for a five months' trip abroad.

Miss Swanson, with her sister, Marcella, made her stage début in the revival of "Floradora" at the Casino in 1920. With the exception of a brief engagement in "Parasites" she has appeared solely in musical productions.

TALL TALK AT WASHINGTON.

If these were not the days of strict prohibition, and if the Senators of the United States were not famous for rigid sobriety, some of them might have been thought to be flown with wine, if not insolent, in Wednesday's debate about amending the Volstead act. Such big words, such fighting language, flew across the Senate chamber! A listener in the gallery might have thought the country on the verge of civil war. There was talk of "legislative anarchy," trampling on the Constitution, and, finally, of "treason." As the latter word, or epithet, came from one who was vowing his readiness to shed his dear blood drop by drop in defense of the Constitution, it seems strange that he had not turned to that document in order to read its definition of treason.

It certainly does not consist in the United States of efforts to change a law or even to repeal a constitutional amendment. This was really admitted, in the end, by Senator BORAH, after the rhetorical heat of his colloquy with Senator BRUCE had somewhat abated. He conceded that Americans had a right to seek to change their Constitution, if they wished to do so. In answer to a direct question, he granted that Congress might re-define the lawful percentage of alcohol, and make it 2.75. If that does not give away the whole case, it is hard to see what would. After these admissions one feels like asking what the row was all about.

However, many great minds outside the Senate have shown signs of feverish excitement in Washington. The Anti-Saloon League, or its representatives on the spot, was much stirred up by the frank statement of General ANDREWS that, in his judgment, the legalizing of pure beer would be a powerful aid in the enforcement of prohibition. This seems to have been taken as a defiance not of the Constitution of the United States, but of something much higher and more sacred, namely, the Anti-Saloon League. For the present it stays its hand, but gives a clear intimation that if General ANDREWS does not repent and recant it will promptly remove him from office. Of course, it naturally takes it for granted, after all that has happened, that it is more powerful than the Government of the United States.

A somewhat similar attitude was taken by the ladies who went to Washington to argue for prohibition before the Senate committee, but remained to pass a resolution demanding, in effect, that District Attorney BUCKNER be called upon to resign. The reason in his case, too, was not any lack of industry or honesty in office, but his statement of the great and insurmountable difficulties of enforcing the present Prohibition law, together with a suggestion that it be modified.

All this outburst of angry passions is, in reality, only further testimony to the deep hold which the new agitation against prohibition has taken upon the people of this country. No observer of public opinion can be insensible to the great change which has swiftly come about. It springs, first of all, from a realization of the immense and growing evils which undiscriminating prohibition has brought in its train. There is plainly forming a new conviction about the best way in which to get rid of them. It is by the orderly process of effecting a reasonable change in the existing law. From striving for this, those engaged in the movement are not to be deterred by threats, even when couched in great swelling words of vanity.

TO BUILD UP FOREIGN TRADE.

Last February Dr. JULIUS KLEIN of the Department of Commerce told a House committee that our export trade faced a serious crisis. Competitors in Europe had launched campaigns to gain ascendency in world markets. "The pressure of these campaigns is already being felt by our exporters," he said. He declared that "the steady development of our trade intelligence service" is imperative. "We must," says a Western authority, returning from a study of European conditions, "go after whatever business we get."

American exporters must be well informed about the needs of communities abroad. The day of imposing upon the South Americans products manufactured to suit the domestic market has gone. Our rivals are solicitous to give South Americans exactly what they want, and are ready to extend long credits. The old consular reports, it must be admitted, did not fully supply American exporters with the information they required. We turned over a new leaf in 1905 when commercial investigation by traveling agents of the Department of Commerce was established with an appropriation of $30,000. Up to the outbreak of the war in 1914 American special trade agents rendered notable service. In 1913 a proposal was made that permanent commercial attachés be maintained at posts where trade prospects were good. Just a month before the war Congress appropriated $100,000 for that purpose. Ten attachés were appointed. Progress was steadily made—rapidly under Secretary HOOVER's administration. Trade commissioners were added to the attachés. But extension, reorganization, stability and permanence were necessary.

Now the House has passed the Hoch bill creating a Foreign Trade Service in the Department of Commerce. It is to consist of senior and junior grade commercial attachés, assistant commercial attachés, trade commissioners and assistant trade commissioners. Under the direction of the Secretary they are to promote the foreign commerce of the United States, report upon activities in foreign countries and undertake missions confided to them. Salaries are to run from $3,000 to $10,000 a year. To be appointed only after examination by the Civil Service Commission, these officers will be attached to the Diplomatic Service, but are not to have the character of "public ministers."

ENGLISH IDEAS OF SPORT.

Some lacrosse players representing Oxford and Cambridge are in this country for a series of games with the teams of American universities. Thus far they have tasted little of victory. Their friends in England have read of defeats administered by colleges whose names they had never heard before. Yet the Oxford and Cambridge men seem to be having a very good time. What remains of life does not at once loom bleak and dreary to an English varsity man if he happens to drop a ball. Nor does he feel that he is eternally disgraced if, by mischance, he falls during a sprint or crumples up in a shell. The young Englishman undoubtedly likes to win quite as much as does the young American, but he seldom yearns to die for dear old Alma Mater.

Among themselves English athletes appear to get more real fun and recreation out of their sports than do our own young heroes. Striving hard to win in any game is always right, but perhaps our players might enjoy sports really more if they took them just a trifle less seriously. After all, second or third or last place in an intercollegiate athletic contest does not necessarily forecast total failure in life. Mr. TILDEN, Miss COLLETT and even "BOBBY" JONES have had some unpleasant experiences of late. But these fine exponents of our amateur sport will undoubtedly continue to find some joy in life even if they are forced, in some degree, to give place to others.

PRIVATE ENTERPRISE IN RUSSIA.

Another step away from Communist doctrine and practice is involved in Moscow's drive to encourage private undertakings in industry. For trade within the country the New Economic Policy, after many vicissitudes, seems to be definitely established. Less than half of the internal commerce for the year 1924-25, according to the Russian Information Bureau at Washington, was conducted by the State, the remainder being in the hands of the cooperatives, peasants and private traders. If the cooperatives be regarded as a Government agency, private and peasant traders would still account for more than 30 per cent. of the total turnover. Industry, on the other hand, is governmentalized to the extent of 89 per cent., and big industry up to 99 per cent. It is now proposed that private capital and initiative be given a freer hand in all but the "heavy" industries—metals, mining, lumber and transportation.

It is an anomaly that further concessions to "capitalism" should be deemed necessary at a time when industry as a whole is making progress. According to our Moscow correspondent, production in the last fiscal year showed an increase of two-thirds over the preceding year. One explanation is that last year's satisfactory crops created a demand for manufactured goods which even increased production is unable to meet. But probably the more far-reaching reason is that efficiency has not kept up with the volume of production. Goods in the State factories are made at a loss, if the Government subventions are left out of the reckoning. To attempt to meet the full national demand by this kind of bookkeeping would bankrupt the Treasury. To cope with the situation efforts are now under way to reduce overhead in a "ruthless war" against "State bureaucracy" in industry and commerce. But apparently greater importance is attached to the enlisting of private enterprise. This is open confession of the superior efficiency of the private manufacturer.

That the Soviet Government will succeed in enlisting foreign capital in large amounts is highly doubtful. Even in the matter of selling goods to Russia it has just been shown, in the case of the proposed German Government guarantees for exporters to Russia, how hazardous the undertaking is regarded. That would be much more emphatically the case with private capital actually invested in Russia. Only as the assurance of a permanent policy of toleration is established will private enterprise take up with Russian factories. Conceivably such assurances may be forthcoming from the more moderate faction now in control of the Soviet Government. Concessions to private traders, concessions to the peasantry, invitations to private manufacturers and rumors of a possible modification of the Government's foreign trade monopoly do indicate a drift in Russia toward compromise with hard fact.

PROPERTY IN BOOKS.

Two bills are before the Patent Committees of Congress for reshaping the Copyright statute, the Vestal bill and the Perkins bill. In both, exclusive control of literary property is extended to the lifetime of the author and fifty years thereafter. Great as this extension is, it is justified. For the best seller of ephemeral value the present brief period is sufficient to secure all possible rewards. A longer time is requisite for a work of creative genius, or of that infinite capacity for taking pains which is the essence of productive scholarship. In an era much given to the immediate and flashy success, copyright extension offers substantial inducements to work of solid and permanent value.

In other respects the Perkins bill seems open to serious objection. It enables the author's heirs to stop the sale of a book. When the publisher has made a substantial investment in revising it from time to time and in pushing its sale, this makes possible a procedure not easily distinguished from extortion. Under the Vestal bill the book is controlled jointly by the publisher and the heirs of the author. While professing to secure for author and publisher "exclusive control" of the property created, the Perkins bill opens the way to infringements of the kind attempted on all previous occasions when similar improvements in the Copyright law have been attempted. These are technical matters, such as the sale in the United States of English-made books the American copyright of which is held by American publishers; the purchase by librarians and collectors of European editions; the importation of scientific reports and the more expensive scientific publications. A statement issued by GEORGE HAVEN PUTNAM in behalf of the National Association of Book Publishers goes into them exhaustively and with a candor unmistakable.

Admittedly the Vestal bill was shaped by authors, publishers and book-manufacturing unions; yet it is intelligently framed in the spirit of the Berne convention and takes the most enlightened view of the interest of all concerned. The Perkins bill was inspired by librarians whom Major PUTNAM shows to be imperfectly informed as to the needs of authors and publishers, being concerned chiefly with their own predilections. "They talk of 'convenience' to themselves," he says, "while we contend for justice and for the larger interests, literary and manufacturing, of the whole country." The truth of this must be apparent to all who will give Major PUTNAM's statement the careful attention it deserves.

PILING SENTIMENT ON SENTIMENT.

It is not June, and Heaven has not yet tried Earth if it be in tune, but IRVING BERLIN has laid his ear to the ground and discovered that it is not. What we now want, according to him, is the sentimental ballad; what we get is jazz. It is somewhat surprising to learn that sentimentality and jazz do not mix. That would not be the conclusion of one who cups his ear for the sounds that issue from cabarets, dance orchestras, vaudeville stages and the lips of whistlers on the streets. A certain amount of clang and clatter is audible, but that comes from ingenious orchestration, not from a failure to make sentiment and the saxophone lie down together.

No feeling in songs today? Why, the very rhymes and titles ooze syrup. "Alone" and "home" are the saccharine words ending the principal lines of a sentimental ballad that is driving everything but an S O S off the radio. It may not be jazz; nobody seems to know just what that is, but it is frequently jazzed, and is certainly so full of feeling that there is no room for anything else. Merely to scan the titles of popular songs fills the heart with sweet melancholy and the eyes with tears. "I Wisht I Was in Peoria" twiddles the heartstrings. "You Forgot to Remember" is another that puts a lump in the throat. The list of love songs, especially the sad tales of unrequited passion, is endless. There is "She Was Just a Sailor's Sweetheart," or, if one prefers the ditty of mother love, a hundred "mammy" songs or such affecting melodies as "Cross My Heart, Mother, I Love You."

These are the songs of today. Last year—or was it the year before?—"What'll I Do?" was everywhere in the air and "I Want to Be Happy" was getting a start. Five, ten, twenty years ago our ears rang with songs adrip with sentiment, and unless all signs fail we are going to hear them next year and the year after. If there is a real and rising demand for "something with a bit of feeling," the result may be a tune appallingly sticky and sweet.

THE SARATOGA BATTLEFIELDS SAVED.

It would have been unseemly for the Legislature to adjourn without passing Assemblyman ESMOND's bill to acquire and restore the battlefields of the Burgoyne campaign, Oriskany, Fort Stanwix, Bennington and Saratoga. A month ago there was apprehension, with the sesquicentennial State celebration impending, that the Legislature would do nothing at this session. Mr. ESMOND rallied the historical societies and made an appeal:

> The heroes of Saratoga and Oriskany must be recognized now or be forever forgotten. Their skulls have been plowed up and placed on the fence posts. The redoubts behind which they fought and died are being obliterated. The very location of their interment is becoming uncertain. . . . When France and Poland come here next year to honor LAFAYETTE and KOSCIUSKO, must Americans bow their heads in shame?

The answer is that the New York battlefields will be prepared for the reception of distinguished French and Polish, and no doubt English, visitors in October, 1927. Saratoga, says Lord MAHON, "not merely changed the relations of England and the feelings of Europe toward the insurgent Colonies, but it has modified, for all time to come, the connection between every colony and every parent State." On Wednesday Governor SMITH went into conference with the fiscal leaders of the Legislature, and it was agreed that the Esmond bill should carry an appropriation of $140,000 for the battlefields, of which $65,000 should be spent for the purchase of land at Saratoga and Oriskany, and $75,000 be applied to restore Oriskany, Fort Stanwix, Bennington (where much of the fighting was done in New York territory) and Saratoga. To provide for this result and to set aside $75,000 for the State celebration and $100,000 for the Philadelphia Sesquicentennial, a national event, the appropriation to pay for tubercular cattle will be cut and financial plans will have to be altered.

Originally the Esmond bill called for an expenditure of $285,000. Amendments brought it down to $140,000. The estimate was not excessive, but advocates of battlefield preservation are satisfied to win their cause and to look forward to seeing the work of restoration well begun after the lands are acquired. More money will be needed to complete it and for maintenance. It will be a relief to have the oil and tire advertising boards indicating the battlefields replaced by dignified monuments and tablets that tell the story of the valor of the American patriots who foiled the strategy of BURGOYNE and compelled the surrender of his army. Sir EDWARD CREASY, in including Saratoga among the decisive battles of the world, declares that no military event had "more important influence on the future fortunes of mankind."

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

They Dominated by Threats of Prosecution.

Judge MORTON of the Federal court in Boston, in granting the temporary injunction sought by Mr. MENCKEN, made remarks which went very well with those of the Police Magistrate who recently dismissed the charge of circulating obscene literature which the Watch and Ward had made against the editor.

While admitting that the officers of the society had the same right as all citizens to invoke the law, the Judge declared it illegal for them to threaten with prosecution dealers who are selling books or periodicals which in the opinion of those officials are indecent.

That is exactly what the head of the Watch and Ward Society long has been doing, thus establishing an irresponsible censorship. Many of the bans thus enforced could not have been upheld by means of a trial in court, any more than was the one it tried to lay on The American Mercury. The occasional victims of this abuse usually have been poor newsdealers who could not afford to contest.

As for the proprietors of bookstores in Boston, they have fallen into the habit of submitting to the society a copy of any doubtful book or periodical before putting it on sale. If it was declared improper, these more influential merchants have been allowed five days in which to dispose of the dubious stock on hand.

But why impropriety should be tolerated for five days, in order to spare a book dealer the pain of a money loss, is something not understandable outside of Watch and Ward circles. The story helps, however, to make comprehensible the submissiveness of the Boston dealers.

His Theory the More Plausible One.

After Mr. MENCKEN won in the Boston Police Court he was asked to be the guest of honor at a luncheon in the Union Living Room in Cambridge. There he was welcomed by 600 Harvard students, and, after brief speeches by Professors FELIX FRANKFURTER and ZACHARIAH CHAFEE, both of the Harvard Law School Faculty, he told the young men why it was that he had offered himself for arrest.

Cynics have said that it was to gain publicity for himself and his magazine. Against this theory is the fact that neither he nor it is in need of publicity. Mr. MENCKEN's own explanation to the students, as reported in The Harvard Crimson, is far more plausible. He told them that he went to Boston to teach the Watch and Ward people that they were not beyond reach, as they have long been allowed to think themselves, and "to establish the right of a man accused by the society to an open trial in court."

Those are commendable motives, and Mr. MENCKEN is to be praised for fighting his own battle in person, instead of letting some poor newsdealer fight it for him.

Mr. MENCKEN also said, referring to the Watch and Ward sort of censorship: "This thing is going on all over America at present. The worst thing in the State, though, is indolence in the face of such outrages. Nine-tenths of the people, when confronted by this sort of thing, won't fight. Yet it can be done and ought to be done." Mr. MENCKEN did it. What the ultimate result will be remains to be seen, but so far he has scored twice over his foes, once in Police Court and again before a Federal Judge.

Real Doctors Are Not in "Schools."

A too common misapprehension as to the medical profession was expressed this week by SAMUEL UNTERMYER in a letter to JOHN KNIGHT, Republican leader of the State Senate. As a reason for opposing the Webb-Loomis Medical Practice bill, Mr. UNTERMYER wrote: "The great body of physicians in this State is so divided, and there are so many schools of physicians at war with one another, that it is unjust to place the members of any one school in the power of this dominating faction or of any other faction."

But the medical profession, properly so called, is not divided into either schools or factions. Their only division is into general practitioners and specialists. The latter, however, have had the same preliminary training as the former, and between the two there is no war and nothing like a war. In theory always, and in practice usually, they work together in perfect harmony.

The only war is between the followers of the various cults and fads that form the lunatic fringe of medicine. There is where denunciations of rivals are to be heard, and naturally, for each group insists on vaunting and exploiting the efficacy of a single remedy for every ill, and each is obliged to declare all panaceas except its own to be worthless.

The real doctor does not believe in cure-alls. He does not ban suggestion or "physiotherapy" when his diagnosis indicates its value. Whether the Webb-Loomis bill does or does not put too much power in the hands of too few men is debatable, but its fault is not that of giving one "school" of real doctors too much authority over other "schools," also of real doctors.

Recognition Came Immediately.

Commissioner MCLAUGHLIN acts promptly, both in rewarding meritorious achievement and in giving rewards of the opposite sort for demonstrated inefficiency. The detectives who by the exercise of so much skill and intelligence captured the "radio burglar," HILTON, already have been promoted, while the greater number who patrolled in vain the narrow area of his operations have been shaken, not up, but down into lower positions and salaries.

The Commissioner sets a high standard for his detectives, and those who do not reach it must have good excuses or out they go—or, at least, back to the sidewalks.

The Times in the Sierra Madre.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Last September three of us set out on mule back from Tepehuanes, the end of the railroad in Durango, for the heart of the Sierra Madre Mountains. There, for over a month, not even a rumor percolated into the interior until one fine day the "mule express" arrived with the first copies of THE NEW YORK TIMES. The joy of finding a mine, rich in gold and silver, could not have exceeded that felt upon the receipt of THE TIMES. We Americans have such a thirst for news that to be cut off from it for any length of time imposes a great hardship.

Probably the most interesting part of the coming of the newspapers was the effect of the picture section upon the natives. It was their initiation into the mysteries of civilization, and for hours a group of swarthy miners, wrapped in their gaudy serapes, could be seen carefully poring over each page. The isolation and ignorance of these poor people is incredible. Many have never seen a wagon, let alone an auto or train; few wear shoes, none modern dress, and their means of living are the crudest. Many of their adobe huts can hardly be called shelters, they are so flimsily constructed, and methods of work belong more to the sixteenth than to the twentieth century. Even cultivation is conducted by means of a wooden plow and a pair of oxen.

SCOPES CASE APPEAL.

Arguments to Be Made Before Tennessee Supreme Court in May.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read in this morning's TIMES an amazing letter entitled "Tennessee's Last Laugh," written by David C. Johnson, who describes himself as "a former resident and practicing attorney in the State of Tennessee and a believer in justice."

Mr. Johnson's letter is devoted to a criticism of the press for its attitude toward the people of Tennessee last Summer and to a criticism of the ethical and legal conduct of the Scopes case by counsel for the defense.

Mr. Johnson makes the following statements, as he says, to inform the general public:

First, he says that none of the counsel for the defense were careful enough in the trial of the case to prepare and file a bill of exceptions, which would safeguard the constitutional questions involved and place the Scopes case on appeal before the Supreme Court of Tennessee.

Secondly, he says that as a consequence of this neglect the Supreme Court of Tennessee has refused to review the Scopes case on appeal and that the case now stands with the conviction of John Scopes sustained.

It would seem as if a man like Mr. Johnson, who claims to be interested in serving justice and informing the general public, might have taken the trouble to acquaint himself with the facts of the Scopes appeal, which have frequently been set forth in the columns of the press. Mr. Darrow, Mr. Hays and myself, representing the defense, left with our Tennessee counsel the function of preparing and filing the bill of exceptions for appeal. The bill was prepared, but the failure to file it in time was due to error on the part of the learned Judge who presided at the trial and to Attorney General Stewart, who prosecuted the case. However, the case was placed on the calendar of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, where it now is. Counsel for the defense also prepared a printed brief of 141 pages covering all the issues raised, which brief was filed in the Supreme Court of Tennessee two months ago. Furthermore, the Supreme Court of Tennessee never refused to review the case, and only two days ago we received a letter from the Clerk of the Supreme Court of Tennessee notifying us that the Scopes case was on the calendar, and also a letter from Judge Neal, our chief counsel in Tennessee, stating that the argument on appeal would be held some time between the first and fifteenth day of May at Nashville. At that time all the constitutional questions involved, both under the liberal Constitution of Tennessee and the Constitution of the United States, will be argued.

Counsel for the defense at no time throughout the trial, as alleged by Mr. Johnson, joined in any effort to belittle the intelligence of the people of Tennessee. As I said at the time and since, what happened at Dayton could have happened in Vermont or New York if there had been the same combination of fanaticism and eloquent leadership to misinform the public. Indeed, the same spirit of intolerance and disregard for individual rights is now manifest in the good old Yankee State of Massachusetts in the present attempt there to prosecute H. L. Mencken and to prohibit the sale of his magazine, The American Mercury.

When lawyers like Mr. Johnson are prepared to make the same considerable sacrifice of valuable business and vacation time that counsel for John Scopes made by going to Tennessee last Summer to defend a principle of freedom, Mr. Johnson and his type will be in a better position to criticize the motives of other members of the bar who are at least occasionally moved to action by a public-spirited interest.

DUDLEY FIELD MALONE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Scopes appeal has not been dismissed by Supreme Court of Tennessee, but will be heard some time in May. The account in the letter published in THE TIMES of April 13 in regard to dismissal of the bill of exceptions is untrue.

Fascism in the Greek Islands.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The articles of Rossi have been very illuminating on the dark working of the Mussolini Government.

The numerous Dodecanesians of America have very interestedly followed the polemic attitude of Cesare Rossi against the Italian dictator. The dictator extends his oppressive regime to the Hellenic Dodecanese Islands. This policy is responsible for the gradual depopulation of the islands.

"SPRING."

(The title of my poem, "Spring," has been plagiarized by several piratical persons in the past. Notice is hereby given that those who attempt to lift it in the future will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.—R. W.)

Since the year one, and in fact B. C.,
A million poets, it seems to me,
When the very first leaf peeped out from a tree,
Have burst into ecstatic poetry
And written an ode on Spring.
The Greeks, in the time of Euripides,
Aeschylus, also Sophocles,
That humorous cuss, Aristophanes,
As they sneezed their very first Winter sneeze,
Have penned an ode to Spring.

In every measure metrical,
Anapest or trochaical,
Syllabic or iambical,
(And don't forget dactyllical),
They wrote their odes on Spring.
In vein heroic or satiric,
Couplet or rondeau idyllic,
Every one who's tried a lyric
Has caught the budtime epidemic
And written an ode on Spring.

So every poet who spurs has won—
Shakespeare, Byron, Tennyson,
Raleigh, Keats and Stevenson—
As their careers had scarce begun,
Composed an ode on Spring.
Now every nation has had the fad;
In sonnets good and ballades bad,
In verse that's blank or free or mad,
Each would-be poet or love-sick lad
Has sung his ode to Spring.

FLIGHT FROM VERSAILLES.

French Criticism of Our Position Is Accepted as Just.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In today's TIMES you published an article from The Temps that seemed to me exceedingly fair and just. America is supposed to be a quixotic and gallant nation. Our wars have been fought in the past for what we conceived to be justice and freedom. The last war was no exception to the rule, and yet as soon as the war was done we tarnished the spirit of our cause and ran to cover behind party politics and business interest, shirking a responsibility far greater than that of entering the war. It was cowardly and selfish of us to withdraw as we did. We could not see any immediate gain for ourselves, and we ran away from trouble with a celerity and expedition that rather denied that young idealism on which, as a nation, we have been pluming ourselves for the last century or so. It was an undignified flight that brought us back breathless from Versailles, and possible entanglements. We had put our hand to the plow, and we should not have turned back with what we had undertaken unfinished. Better to have stayed consistently out of the war than to have gone off afterward and left the caldron still sizzling. It has led to a political unrest, engendering hatred and malice—the result of that great negation of ours in the face of a generous danger.

To entangle ourselves in European politics is to win for ourselves a most unsavory and uncomfortable responsibility, and if we could project ourselves and our country into interstellar space it might indeed be better to keep clear of foreign entanglements. Unfortunately the oceans of the world are being turned into wayside ditches by modern enterprise, and we cannot let Europe tear herself to pieces and remain unaffected—we are bound too close to her commercially, if in no other way.

We are generous to a fault in time of material catastrophe; we pride ourselves on being the first on the scene after fire or plague or earthquake, yet in time of spiritual calamity we are so miserly and so smugly self-righteous that even our youth cannot excuse our poverty of spirit. Since we are members of a world daily realizing its need for peace and unity, since we are young and strong and powerful, and since we have a certain reputation for idealism, let us cast our politics aside for the moment and use this young strength of ours for the furtherance of the good things of earth. At the moment we are stagnating in a dead water, and to all outer criticism we reply with such a poisonous blast of hatred and small prejudice as speaks badly for the public health and sanity. We have spent the last seven years pulling down everything that touched us, or, adopting the bad and cowardly policy of sitting on the fence, have waited for trouble to go by. Let us do a vigorous Spring cleaning in both our foreign and domestic policies, and above all turn our power and wealth toward bringing about world peace, which we can only do by messing our dainty fingers into European affairs and accepting our fair share of responsibility.

TACNA-ARICA PROPOSALS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If justice and right could prevail, the Tacna-Arica territory should be neutralized and an honest and free plebiscite carried out. In this case Peru would win. But as justice and right in this world is yet a Utopia, the following settlement would, perhaps, be the best and only solution to the problem:

A strip of land ten kilometers on each side of the Arica La Paz Railway to be given to Bolivia. The territory south of this strip to go to Chile; that north of it to go to Peru. Bolivia to pay $5,000 to Peru and $5,000 to Chile. Arica to be declared an international free port, governed by a commission of one Peruvian, one Chilean and one Bolivian, presided over by an American proposed by the United States and accepted by a majority of the three countries interested.

This arrangement would give Peru about half of the territory in dispute, the other half to Chile and the desired outlet to the sea to Bolivia, and although, perhaps, it would not satisfy completely any of the countries interested, it must not be forgotten that no settlement whatever will.

C. A. BLUME.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

All the nations of the Western Hemisphere are interested in the just and satisfactory settlement of the Tacna-Arica question between the nations concerned. An unsatisfactory settlement for either claimant would be fraught with undesirable possible future prejudice to the good-will and friendly relations of the principals. That the present plan carries many problems of great delicacy and difficulty of adjustment is quite apparent.

In the event that a satisfactory solution under the present plan is finally seen to be impracticable an alternative plan is suggested, as follows:

Restore sovereignty to the original owner, Bolivia; allot permanently to each of the three nations, Bolivia, Peru and Chile, one-third of the revenues of the one major industry of the two provinces, the nitrate industry.

This simple plan carries with it something of concession and something of gain for each of the three nations. It provides the seaport which sooner or later would become a matter of necessity for Bolivia. It provides a bond of union among three nations as a substitute for many years of heartache and contention. It conserves national self-respect for all parties in the highest degree and provides discordant Europe with another example of unselfishness as the key to peace.

AMENDING THE DRY LAW.

How Congress Might Act After a Referendum.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The distinguished constitutional lawyer, Louis Marshall, has written an opinion on the Karle-Phelps bill, which proposes to submit the following question to the voters of New York State:

"Should the Volstead act be modified by Congress so as to permit the States to define intoxicating liquors for themselves?"

His conclusion is: "Even if a majority of the New York electorate were to vote in the affirmative, it would be beyond the power of Congress to pass an act permitting the States to define for themselves the meaning of the phrase 'intoxicating liquors' as employed in the Eighteenth Amendment."

With all due respect for Mr. Marshall, whom I esteem very highly, his conclusion is a purely legalistic quibble. It would be true only in the event that Congress committed the unthinkable stupidity of passing a law permitting the individual States to define the meaning of the term "intoxicating liquor" without first striking out the existing definition in the Volstead act.

The first thing that Congress would do, assuming it were sufficiently impressed by an affirmative vote on the referendum, would be to repeal the definition of "intoxicating liquors" in the Volstead act, leaving the alcoholic content an open question—precisely as it stands in the Eighteenth Amendment itself.

In that event the intoxicating quality of liquor would be left to the determination of the courts, and the decision in United States against Hill, affirmed in the case of Eisner, plaintiff in error, against the United States, would undoubtedly be followed, holding that the intoxicating quality of a liquor was a question of fact to be determined by a jury.

In the more rigid prohibition States the prospect of such latitude would hardly be welcomed and they would undoubtedly cling to their present State laws. In States where a more tolerant attitude prevails the existing State law definitions would be changed to meet the new situation. In States which have no State enforcement law, as in New York, they would probably be content with the judicial determination of what constitutes "intoxicating liquor" and let it go at that.

It would not be necessary for Congress to pass an act affirmatively "permitting" the individual States to define intoxicating liquors. All that need be done is to repeal the definition in the Volstead act. That obstacle out of the way, the States would fall back upon their reserved powers. If there were any question about that the second section of the Eighteenth Amendment gives explicit concurrent authority to the States to enforce it by "appropriate legislation."

Mr. Marshall pooh-poohs the concurrent provision of the Eighteenth Amendment, but his language is somewhat vague. From what I can make out he admits that Congress can change the definition of intoxicating liquors, but does not seem to see the possibility of Congress refraining from making any definition at all. The idea that Congress must make some definition of intoxicating liquor seems to be an obsession, for he blindly plunges on with the argument that "it is not conceivable that it (Congress) would or could permit the States to define what is or is not 'intoxicating liquor' in a manner which does not conform with the definition of that term by Congress," and so forth, culminating in the string of impossible instances upon which he founds the alarming charge that we would become the laughing-stock of the world. But these impossible instances are all out of his own imagination. He seems at last to have caught the import of his transcendental flight, for he endeavors to retrieve himself by admitting that: "Nobody can seriously believe that Congress would so stultify itself as to create such a monstrosity in legislation."

The second part of Mr. Marshall's opinion deals with the power of the State Legislature to submit a referendum outside of the three instances specifically provided in the State Constitution, namely: (1) a convention to revise the Constitution; (2) ratification of an amendment to the Constitution, and (3) approval of a State bond issue. He thinks that if the Karle-Phelps bill is passed and the referendum were attempted to be held at a special election it could be enjoined by a taxpayer's action as entailing an unjustifiable expense. That information seems to be the only crumb of comfort that the Citizens' Committee of 1,000 for Law Enforcement can possibly derive out of the lavish fee they possibly paid for this extraordinary "opinion." But those who are interested in the success of the Karle-Phelps bill might take notice that it would be safer to have the referendum at the regular November election rather than at a special election.

A Pledge for Anti-Vivisectionists.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Would Edwin Markham and that other gentleman who so nobly brings up the fear be willing to sign the following pledge as anti-vivisectionists, namely: Not to avail themselves, or permit any others under their charge to avail themselves, of any of the benefits that have accrued to mankind from animal experimentation, which would include, for instance, vaccine and antitoxins (as tetanus serum, Pasteur rabies treatment), insulin, various sorts of surgical procedure and perfection of technique?

Examples could, of course, be multiplied indefinitely, but these would seem sufficient to cause some hesitation to would-be signatories (those at any rate who will retain full possession of their faculties). No one is so callous as to be indifferent to the unavoidable suffering inflicted on the victims of scientific research (which are, however, as humanely cared for as is possible in relation to the success of the experiment), but I should think even Mr. Markham and his friends would prefer the use of animals in the instruction of young surgeons—unless, indeed, they desire to offer themselves as a human sacrifice to the advancement of learning.

AMERICANS MAY TESTIFY.

British Board on Hosiery Duty Plea Reserves Decision.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company. By Wireless to The New York Times.

LONDON, April 15.—Perhaps American manufacturers will give evidence before the committee appointed by the British Board of Trade to inquire into the application for duty on hosiery and knitted wear.

It was intimated by importers who are opposing the application that some American manufacturers are willing to testify. The applicants objected on the ground that the President of the Board of Trade had clearly indicated his opinion that foreign manufacturers should not be called as witnesses at these inquiries.

The Chairman asked for price lists to be proposed as evidence and reserved decision as to whether American witnesses would be heard.

The French Foreign Office and Mr. Lloyd George hastened to deny the story.

He attended Public School 11, Brooklyn, and then went to Lockwood's Academy, in Adelphi Street, which later became Adelphi Academy. At the age of sixteen he entered the wholesale grocery business in Manhattan and remained with one firm until 1878.

Early in his career Mr. Harman became interested in Republican politics. At the age of twenty-three he was elected to the Board of Supervisors from the Twentieth Ward. After serving one term there he was appointed Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue, a position which he held eight years. In 1888-89 he was librarian of the Assembly at Albany, and in 1890 was appointed inspector of steam vessels in the harbor of New York by President Harrison.

Three years later he was appointed a Deputy Police Commissioner of Brooklyn. He resigned from this office to accept the nomination for register, to which he was later elected. During his term his office was the meeting place of politicians of all faiths, especially of a coterie of men who sought Mr. Harman's opinions on political affairs and who enjoyed his genial good nature and fund of anecdote.

In 1895 Mr. Harman was elected a trustee of the Brevoort Savings Bank, and in 1910 was elected Vice President. He was a member of the Ohio Society of New York, the Crescent Athletic Club, and the old Union League Club. He is survived by a sister, Miss Caroline Harman.

100 URGE PASSAGE OF COPYRIGHT BILL

Publishers, Authors and Artists Ask House Committee to Adopt Vestal Measure.

SAY PROTECTION IS NEEDED

Membership in International Union Advocated to Aid Circulation of Our Literature Abroad.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Publishers, authors, screen writers, dramatists, artists and others of creative genius today asked Congress to protect their property rights in their creations by enacting an iron-clad copyright law providing that the United States become a member of the International Copyright Union.

More than one hun ed appeared before the House Patents Committee to urge favorable consideration of the Vestal bill, drawn by representatives of the creative arts themselves.

Will Irwin, writer and publicist; Major George Haven Putnam, American authority on literature from the publishers' standpoint; Gene Buck, lyric writer and playwright; Esther Hunt, New York City artist and sculptor; representatives of the National Association of Book Publishers, the Authors' League of America and others appeared to support the bill.

Mr. Irwin said there was grave danger of this country's foreign relations becoming more and more involved through misu- 'anding of our people. It had been the experience of the allied nations' propagandists that a right understanding had been best produced by literature which gave a true picture of a nation, he said.

America's circulation of its literature abroad had been hampered because United States copy ghts were given little or no recognition. Membership in the International Copyright Union was essential to remedy this, he declared.

Mr. Irwin urged upon the committee that the very heart of the Vestal bill was the automatic copyright provisions—that section which declares an artist's right in his creation the minute it is completed.

A writer now might send a manuscript to twenty or thirty different publishers before it was accepted, and during that time he had no protection, said Mr. Irwin.

Putnam Speaks for Publishers.

"The principle we advocate," Mr. Irwin declared, "is that a work of art is the property of the creator from the start. Under this bill any person who completes a piece of work has it copyrighted automatically, and it is protected and transferable anywhere within the borders of the copyright union."

Protection for American publishers from foreign competition on editions on which they own the American rights, as provided under Section 30 of the bill, was asked by Major Putnam, who appeared as Chairman of the Bureau of Copyright of the National Association of Book Publishers.

The section he particularly favored, he said, was opposed by librarians, who argued that it would interfere with their purchases of foreign-bound books. The section prohibits importations of editions which would be sold in the United States in competition with American editions published by those holding American rights. The bill would permit sales to libraries and collectors, but would insist that they be made through American publishers.

"The law has been an injustice ever since 1891," Major Putnam continued. "It has been a serious detriment to the publisher and injurious to the book-buying elements of the country who are interested in the encouragement of the book publishing business."

Esther Hunt Charges Income Loss.

The feeble way in which, it was said, the present copyright law was protecting painters and sculptors was portrayed by Esther Hunt of New York City formerly of San Francisco. She represented the American Federation of Arts, the American Art Bureau and art dealers and publishers.

Charles Dana Gibson and his works of art had been plagiarized off the market, and Maxfield Parrish's creations of genius were being imitated into oblivion, she said. This was due, she asserted, to the lax laws and the impossibility of enforcing them so as to prohibit imitations and infringements.

She produced originals and imitations and said they showed how Parrish's work was being discredited through the sale at low prices of cheap and poorly done imitations.

She herself had suffered a reduction in income from $10,000 a year to $1,500 as a result of the placing on the market of cheap imitations of her work, she said.

She proposed an amendment to make dealers, wholesale and retail, responsible for handling these imitations and providing a penalty for each plagiarized copy found in their possession.

Publishers File Statement.

In connection with the hearing the book publishers filed a statement which read, in part:

"A law passed in 1891 gave a measure of protection to foreign writers, but was so restricted in scope that American authors did not receive any protection for their works in other countries unless they published simultaneously abroad. This situation was not remedied in the revision of 1909.

"American authors have greater importance in the eyes of the world today and are in greater need of foreign protection for their rights. American publishing, too, has been strengthened by time and experience and has not fears as to competition.

"The publishers are in complete accord with the wishes of the authors in this revision, and have to be considered as authors themselves in connection with encyclopedias, atlases and material of all kinds prepared by employes and assistants."

Those Present or Represented.

Among those present or represented were:

Sylvio Hein, song writer; William Hamilton Osborne, representing the Authors' League of America; F. L. Silcox, Chairman of the Conference Committee which drafted the bill; John J. Phillips of Boston, representing leading textbook publishers; Matthew Woll, Vice President of the American Federation of Labor; Leila Machlin, Secretary of the American Art Federation; Leroy Scott, another member of the Bill Drafting Committee; John Macrae, President, and Frederick G. Melcher, Secretary, of the National Association of Book Publishers, both of New York; J. W. Hillman, Frederick A. Stokes, Arthur H. Scribner, Alexander Grosset, Harry L. Burt, George H. Doran, J. W. CLEVELAND ASSAILS GOVERNMENT SYSTEM

President's Son Says the Most Inefficient Form Was Chosen by Our Forefathers.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 15.—"Fear of government by collusion led our forefathers to accept a government by confusion," said Richard F. Cleveland, lawyer and son of President Cleveland, before the Women's Civic League here yesterday.

"The American forefathers deliberately chose a form of government which has resulted in the most inefficient government in the entire world," he continued. "The greatest weakness in the American system of government lies in the lack of connection between the legislative body and the executive of the country and the curtailment of power of the latter branch."

He traced the formation of the American Republic and pointed to the factors which he declared prompted the founders of the country to adopt such a system of government.

"Our forefathers," he said, "were endeavoring to get away from the powerful executive authority which executives in England, France and Germany exercised at that time and which caused many to come to America in search of political freedom. The pioneers wanted to get away from that sort of thing. They did not believe in the individual being kicked around at the will of an executive. The less government the better off the people would be, was their principle.

"And so they deviated from the European form of government and created an executive with too little authority and too short a term of office and with no connection with the legislative body.

"This system of government is based upon one important and indispensable thing—a tremendous interest of the people in the vote and Government. But the people have not supplied this, which is the principal ingredient. This often has resulted in crooks and thugs being elected to executive offices."

ROTARIANS PRESENT FLAGS.

Club Here Gets Belgian Ensign—British Club Gets Stars and Stripes.

The international aspect of the Rotary movement was emphasized at the weekly luncheon of the New York Rotary Club yesterday noon at the Hotel McAlpin when Victor Bogart, acting for the club in Brussels, presented a large Belgian flag to his American confreres and Owen Coogan of the New York club presented an American flag to Charles Hayward of the Wolverhampton (England) Rotary Club. Charles E. Keck, President of the New York club, accepted the Belgian flag.

Mr. Coogan said that the American colors were on display at the meetings of more than 120 Rotary clubs in foreign countries.

James A. Hamilton, State Industrial Commissioner, speaking on "Labor and Industry," praised the Workmen's Compensation act as a stabilizer of industry. In the year ending June 3, 1925, he said, $25,669,000 was paid to injured workmen in more than 63,000 factories and 100,000 mercantile establishments. More than 2,750,000 persons in the employ of 200,000 others are subject to the benefits of compensation, he said.

Raymond E. Knoeppel, President of the New York State Association for Crippled Children, an organization of 7,000 Rotarians, told of plans for the opening of a new camp at Fire Island this Summer. He announced a benefit vaudeville performance tomorrow evening at the Manhattan Opera House and when Thomas Walker, Chairman of the benefit, suggested that the gallery seats be bought by club members and distributed among members of boys' clubs in the city the Rotarians raised $1,000 in ten minutes to buy out not only the gallery but a part of the balcony.

PERLMAN ELECTION STANDS.

House Confirms New York Representative's Right to Seat.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Without the formality of a rollcall and with only brief discussion, the House adopted a resolution today declaring that Representative Nathan D. Perlman of the Fourteenth New York District, and not William I. Zirovich, was elected to the House in the election of 1924.

Mr. Zirovich, who was the Democratic candidate against Mr. Perlman, contested the latter's right to a seat in Congress on the ground of alleged irregularities.

An examination of the ballots in dispute was made by Elections Committee No. 1, which held that Mr. Perlman was entitled to the certificate of election issued to him by the Secretary of State of New York. It so reported to the House.

While the Democratic members refrained from voting on the case in committee, Representative Hudspeth of Texas, a minority member, made the statement today that the report should be accepted as the unanimous conclusion of all the committee members.

On motion of Representative Colton of Utah, Chairman of the committee, Mr. Perlman was continued in his seat by a viva voce vote.

Keeping to the right, and taking no risk, is the only safe course to pursue.

APPROVES WIDENING OF UPPER FIFTH AV.

Estimate Board Votes to Make Driveway 45 Feet From 60th to 96th Street.

BUT DEFERS PARK PROJECT

TILTS ENLIVEN SESSION

Spokesmen for Opponents and the Proponents Continue Arguments Outside Board Chamber.

Confronted again by strong opposition on the part of organizations and individuals, to encroachments upon Central Park, the Board of Estimate deferred yesterday for one week action upon the project to slice seven feet from the easterly sidewalk of Central Park West to widen the driveway.

The board, however, approved the plan of widening Fifth Avenue between Sixtieth and Ninety-sixth Streets by taking five feet from the avenue's easterly sidewalk, thus making the driveway forty-five feet wide from curb to curb. Both projects are parts of the general plan formulated by Julius Miller, Borough President of Manhattan, to relieve traffic congestion. As the Fifth Avenue part of the enterprise involved no change of the street, or park, side of the avenue, it had encountered no serious opposition.

Postponement of action on the Central Park West proposal followed another spirited public hearing. One group charged that the project threatened serious park encroachment, while the other maintained just as vehemently that no encroachment upon park preserves was intended. This divergence of view resulted in several heated arguments which, in some instances, were resumed in the corridors outside the Board of Estimate chamber.

Two of the principals in one such altercation gave their names as William R. Stewart, a member of the New York Athletic Club, and Jasper Adams Campbell, President of the Central Park West Association.

Disputes Stewart on Floor.

Mr. Stewart, in the public hearing, had contended that the slicing of the Fifty-ninth Street sidewalk alongside the southern end of Central Park had done great harm there. He added that he had been authorized in writing by the Board of Governors of the New York Athletic Club to protest against the narrowing of the Central Park West sidewalk along the park side. Mr. Campbell denied that Mr. Stewart represented the views of the Board of Governors of the Athletic Club. He said he himself was a governor of the club and that the question had never been formally brought to the board's attention.

During the heated dispute that ensued between the two men Mayor Walker rapped his gavel and good-naturedly remarked that the gymnasium on the fourth floor of the New York Athletic Club was the proper place to settle such differences.

William B. Roulstone, speaking for the Parks and Playgrounds Association, opposed the taking of seven feet from the Central Park West sidewalk on the ground that the widening of th thoroughfare would make it a north-and-south traffic street and attract an unusual number of taxicabs and other vehicles to the park.

"Why is there a wall about Central Park?" Mayor Walker asked.

"It is a matter of safety because of the number of gulleys and ravines immediately inside the wall," replied Mr. Roulstone.

"You don't see walls around European parks," observed the Mayor.

Mayor Walker's Views.

"I'm not one who believes we can't learn anything from the other side of the Atlantic," said the Mayor. "Is there any reason why city property, which belongs to the people, should be walled in?"

Mrs. Frederick L. Wakeham, Chairman of the New York Federation of Women's Clubs, and representing 200,000 women, spoke against any step which could be interpreted as an invasion of the park.

Mayor Walker wanted to know why people did not use the parks more at night. Mrs. Wakeham said they were afraid to. The Mayor said all police protection desired would be accorded Central Park. Mrs. Wakeham declared that conditions there were "deplorable."

Speaking of the plan to take seven feet from the easterly side of Central Park West, Mrs. Wakeham said it meant depriving the public of three and a third acres of parkland.

Mrs. Sally Peters, speaking for the Save the Parks Committee, said the wall around the park served to keep out night marauders.

ADJUSTS PARK AV. DISPUTE.

The Board of Estimate yesterday made an adjustment of the dispute on apportionment of the assessment for the twenty-foot widening of Park Avenue between Thirty-second and Thirty-third Streets by the slicing of twenty feet from the easterly side.

It was a question whether the property owners between Twenty-third and Forty-second Streets should be assessed 50 per cent. of the entire cost of $300,000, or 75 per cent. of the cost should be levied against the Borough of Manhattan and 25 per cent. on the local area. The latter proposition was accepted by all the members of the board except Aldermanic President Joseph V. McKee, who opposed the settlement on the ground that the property owners most vitally affected had acquired material returns from the city in the matter of damages for the improvement.

Martin Canbmy appeared for the No. 1 Park Avenue Corporation and Alfred J. Talley as attorney for forty-nine other property owners, who praised Borough President Julius Miller for the equitable settlement suggested and adopted by the board.

Fire Chief Is Fined $250 For Operating Two Stills

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., April 15.—Charles Scheren, a member of the Borough Council of North Haledon and Chief of that borough's fire department, pleaded non vult contendere in Special Sessions here today to a charge of violation of the Hobart State Prohibition Enforcement act and was fined $250.

Mr. Scheren was arrested on Tuesday by county detectives, who found in a barn owned by him on Peter's Lane two stills with a combined capacity of 90 gallons, 2,000 gallons of cider and 50 gallons of applejack. He was not at the barn, but the detectives saw a man wearing a blue shirt run at their approach and a half hour later in the village they arrested Mr. Scheren, who was wearing a blue shirt.

The plea of non vult contendere, which means that the defendant did not wish to contend the State's charge, was, in effect, a plea of guilty. The fine, which was paid, was imposed by Judge Joseph A. Delaney.

ROCKAWAY BEACH PROJECT IS SHELVED

Board of Estimate Refuses to Vote $10,000,000 to Build Boardwalk as Planned.

NO MONEY SAYS WALKER

To the bitter disappointment of a large delegation of property owners from the Rockaways, the Board of Estimate yesterday virtually shelved the extensive beach and boardwalk improvement plan which ultimately, it has been estimated, would cost $10,000,000.

This decision was reached on the ground that the city and Queens Borough need the money at present for far more urgent necessities. Maurice E. Connolly, though with evident regret, acquiesced in this conclusion. The decision was precipitated when an item on the calendar came before the board calling for an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the construction of groins, jetties and bulkheads for the protection of the public beach and as work preparatory to the actual building of the projected boardwalk.

"We have not the money for this now," Mayor Walker told the group of business men from the Rockaways who had argued that unless the city went ahead with the Edgemere Beach improvement the beach would be destroyed by the Atlantic Ocean and that at the same time real estate values in that vicinity would suffer greatly.

"We need hospitals," the Mayor continued, "and there is also that little matter of new subways."

And then the Rockaway petitioners received another shock. They had looked to Borough President Connolly to champion their cause with the Board of Estimate. But, much to their amazement, Mr. Connolly pronounced the proposed beach and boardwalk improvement a non-essential at present and added that there were scores of more vital needs in the borough, upon which the available funds might be more wisely expended.

"This is not on our list for urgent improvements in Queens," declared Mr. Connolly. "We have flood conditions in the Hollis and Jamaica regions, in an area larger than that of Manhattan Island, where sewers are needed and where a child has already been drowned. We also have a condition where a cesspool is being used at a public school and has become so overflowed on occasions that it had been necessary to send the children home."

Mr. Connolly, in answer to the statement of members of the delegation that the lack of the construction of jetties and bulkheads at Edgemere might result in destruction of land and property, said: "I make the distinction in urgency of improvements between danger to life and danger to property. We need improvement of our boulevards and I deem the completion of Nassau and Queens Boulevards more urgent than this Boardwalk improvement. Ten to fifteen persons already have been killed because of the condition on the Queens Boulevard, where money is needed to relocate the surface car tracks."

The item finally was allowed to go over for one month upon the plea of some of the representatives of Rockaway business associations. It will again come before the Board of Estimate, but its ultimate fate probably will be the same, the petitioners were told.

The Board of Estimate also adopted a resolution, submitted by Controller Berry, calling an executive session of the board for next Monday afternoon to consider various phases of the administration's financial policy on the following fourteen subjects, under which the city's available funds will be grouped:

Subway routes.
Additional supply of drinking water.
Question of amount to be expended in education.
Prevailing wage and salary adjustments.
Hospital betterment and construction.
New libraries and additions to old ones.
How much can be expended this year on parks and playgrounds?
What new court houses can be provided this year?
Adequate surface transportation
City institutions, repairs and betterments
Problem of garbage and refuse disposal.
Jamaica Bay improvement.
Local improvements, especially in Queens Borough.
City-wide congested traffic problem.

NEW BOULEVARD APPROVED.

Estimate Board Adopts Guider Plan for Road to Coney Island.

The construction of a new boulevard 120 feet wide, running parallel with Ocean Parkway, Brooklyn, and to be known as Shell Road, was approved yesterday by the Board of Estimate, which adopted the plan for the improvement submitted by Borough President Joseph A. Guider of Brooklyn.

The new Shell Road will be three-quarters of a mile long and will cost more than $1,000,000. It will begin at Avenue X and Gravesend Avenue, and will be located five miles west of Ocean Parkway. This new thoroughfare will run into the heart of Coney Island, terminating at Neptune Avenue, and will help materially to relieve automobile traffic congestion.

RUSSIA STARTS TRIAL OF AGED WOMAN SPY

Bolsheviki Charge That She Sent Many of Revolutionists to Death or Exile.

PICTURESQUE COURT SCENE

Judge, Prosecutor, Crowd and Prisoner All Huddled Together and She Dominates All.

By WALTER DURANTY.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MOSCOW, April 15.—Since Mme. Caillaux won acquittal on the eve of the great war for the slaying of Joseph Calmette, whom she shot to death in his own office, there has been no public trial of a woman in Europe to compare with that now being held here to judge Anna Egorovna Serebrakova, whom the Russians call "the grandmother of the Czar's secret police."

The old and generally wicked grandmother occupies the same sort of place in Russian popular fiction as the stepmother in Western Europe and the "devil's grandmother" is the peculiar and malefic invention of Russian folklore, meaning more subtle and more dangerous than Satan himself.

For upward of thirty years this woman, Serebrakova, occupied the extraordinary position of being at once an advanced revolutionary with the Nihilist salon, attended by all the revolutionary elements, and a spy of the Czar's political police. Until a year ago no one ever suspected that she was anything but a rather scatter-brained, though ardent, worker for the revolution.

Was Trusted by Red Leaders.

Some of the leading Bolsheviki—Lunar Charski, now Minister of Education and Fine Arts; M. Smidovich, one of the oldest members of the Communist Party and a close friend of Lenin; M. Muralof, now Secretary of the Moscow section of the Communist Party, and M. Smirnoff, who is also now a Commissar—were her intimates whom at different times she callously betrayed to prison or exile.

Until last year she received a pension from the Soviet Government as one of the old trusties of the Revolutionary movement and her connection with the secret police was only revealed by accident. A man named Zubatof was arrested on a charge of former police activities and to save his own skin told Serebrakova's real story.

So now this woman of 72 years is being tried for her life. Her own sons have cast her off—her sons whose connection with the revolutionary movement was her chief anxiety during the years when she was selling revolutionaries for Czarist gold. For there was no sentiment in her treachery. She lived comfortably and well by the betrayal of her friends, this frequenter of the Nihilist salons, whom they nicknamed "Magpie" because she chattered so continually and asked so many questions.

Dancing on Death's Tight-Rope.

Yet there must be some strange satisfaction for the Russian soul in this dancing on death's tight-rope, where a hairsbreadth slip means instant destruction. For she is still undefeated, this old woman, though half blind, trembling and deserted by her children, worn by eight months in prison and so utterly alone to face the least pitiful of Russian Judges.

I saw her in court fighting for her life like Mme. Caillaux, but unlike Mme. Caillaux, with no picked, friendly jury, no powerful influence, no high-priced advocate to help her. It was a curious picture of judicial process—alien as Russia itself is alien from the Western court and Western ideas.

The case is being tried in the wide, low theatre of the Communist Institute. On a little stage there is a red-draped table where sit three Judges. Facing them on the left and sitting just across the table is the prisoner, with the defenders appointed by the State behind her. But she conducts her own defence. In a low, husky voice she replies to the accusations of the public prosecutor standing on the right, and the public huddles in to listen, sitting or standing on the tables below the stage that are supposed to be reserved for the Soviet press.

Prisoner Dominates the Proceedings.

Never did I see anything less like a trial for a human life than this packed, intimate group of human beings—the accused, the Judges, the prosecutor and the public all sitting so closely together.

Serebrakova easily dominates the proceedings, the gray-haired, toothless old creature, wearing an ugly black cloak but garrulous as ever, never failing in reply to the prosecutor's questions. Her face is a yellowish gray but the features are so strong and so masculine that one begins to understand how she gambled thus long and thus daringly with death.

The Judges bend forward to listen and the crowd behind her listens no less attentively. There were not many, perhaps one hundred altogether, though tonight there will be a thousand or more.

Serebrakova knows they are all against her—knows that her condemnation is certain. But her weak voice never falters, her thin lips never quiver, her face of faded bronze never changes.

SHARKEY BRAVES FIRE AND WARNS SLEEPERS

Boxer Gets Everybody Out in Boston Blaze and Then Saves His Dog.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 15.—Jack Sharkey, New England heavyweight boxing champion, today discovered a fire in the six-family apartment house where he lives, on Commonwealth Avenue, and probably saved the lives of several persons by his timely warning.

Hero of many a ring victory, Sharkey found himself in a new rôle when he saw flames spurting twenty feet from a basement window.

The boxer arose early to do road work for his bout with Pat McCarthy on Monday night. He decided to take his German police dog with him, and when he went to the side porch he was driven back by a rush of smoke and flame.

Sharkey returned and roused his wife, who is not well. He told her to dress quickly and take the baby, but did not say how serious the fire was.

Then he went through the building and, by pounding on doors and ringing bells, aroused the fifteen occupants of the six suites. As they fled to the street with whatever clothes they could hastily put on, Sharkey returned and assisted his wife and daughter, Dorothy, to safety.

Every one was out of the building when firemen arrived, and they concentrated all their energy on the flames.

Thermometer Down to 30 on Coldest April 15; Snow Falls on Long Island and Up-State

When the thermometer dropped to 30 at 5:15 o'clock yesterday morning it established a new record for cold on April 15. It clipped two degrees from the former record of 32, which was held by the April 15 of 1885.

April 19, 1875, holds the record, however, for cold at this season. On that date the mercury fell to 21.

The temperature remained low all day yesterday, with a bright sun and a northwest wind which reached a maximum of forty-eight miles an hour. Local baseball games were called off on account of the cold. In some sections of Eastern Long Island there were snow flurries. Warmer weather was predicted for today.

DUNKIRK, N. Y., April 15 (AP).—The forests in the vicinity of Cassadaga Lake and in the Arkwright hills were covered with a five-inch blanket of snow this morning. This is the heaviest snowfall that has been recorded in Northern Chautauqua County in the middle of April in a decade.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., April 15 (AP).—This city experienced the coldest April 15 on record when the official minimum temperature touched 13 degrees above zero early today. A drop of forty-nine degrees occurred in fifteen hours. An inch of snow fell last evening.

$31,268 MORE ADDED TO CATHEDRAL FUND

Bishop Manning Reports an Anonymous Gift of $25,000 to the Cause.

WOMEN'S DIVISION ACTIVE

Each Member Is Urged to Raise $1,000 Additional Toward $1,000,000 Quota This Spring.

New contributions aggregating $31,268.18 were announced yesterday at the first report luncheon of the community divisions of the Committee for Completing the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, held at the Hotel Astor. These gifts and pledges were obtained since the dinner last Monday night, which inaugurated the present campaign.

Included in yesterday's report was an anonymous gift of $25,000 obtained by Bishop Manning, which is to be paid when funds designated for the west front of the cathedral are sufficient to carry this part of the cathedral up to the level of 118 feet above the nave floor.

Bishop Manning, who presided at the luncheon, told the members of the women's division that under the plan of Mrs. Vincent Astor, Chairman of the division, each member was urged to raise at least $1,000 this Spring in additional funds toward the division's objective of $1,000,000 for the north transept. He suggested that prospective contributors be asked to place at least one stone in this transept, the average cost of a stone being $50.

The Rev. Dr. Henry Howard, acting pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, in his address, said that America today, more than ever before, needs the appeal and inspiration which the erection of the cathedral provides, and which will draw the thoughts and affections of the people from material things to a higher sense of moral values.

"This cathedral scheme of yours," he said, "is going to remind men that they are other than the children of time; that they have other and higher relations than those of earth to fulfill; that the building of a cathedral is of a godly character, of infinitely more importance than the acquisition of material wealth. It is going to be a perpetual reminder that there is another and higher world to which we stand related."

The following reports of new gifts were made:

Division reporting.	Amount.
Bishop Manning	$25,000.00
Children's Arch. Rev. T. A. Sparks	60.00
Laymen's Club, B. W. Calley	433.18
Medical Profession, Bishop Manning for Dr. J. Bentley Squier	250.00
Legal Profession, Charles C. Nadal	1,000.00
Sports, Gustavus T. Kirby	250.00
Memorial to Mrs. Hamilton R. Fairfax, Mrs. A. T. Sutcliffe	182.00
Business Men, Bishop Manning for Haley Fiske, Chairman	500.00
Women's (Vice-Chairmen):
Mrs. Alva H. Brown	$218.00
Mrs. Elgin R. L. Gould	1,825.00
Mrs. A. T. Sutcliffe	50.00
Mrs. John B. Walker	1,500.00
	3,593.00
Day's Total	$31,268.18

The plans of other divisions were outlined briefly by Mrs. W. E. Merrill, for education; Walter West, for labor, and Colonel George W. Burleigh, Chairman of the Military and Naval Division.

The next report luncheon will be held at the Hotel Astor, at noon next Tuesday.

INVESTIGATE BOY'S DEATH.

Detectives Hear Another Jumped on Him in Fight Over Ball Game.

Special to The New York Times.

FLORAL PARK, L. I., April 15.—Nassau County detectives began an investigation today of the death of Joseph Edward Scott, 8 years old, of Cherry Lane, East Floral Park. The boy died in the Nassau Hospital in Mineola several days ago of an abscess which developed from internal injuries received three weeks ago in an altercation with another boy.

The trouble followed a ball game, which broke up in a fight among several of the boys. It was reported to the police that another boy, a few years older and somewhat larger, had thrown the Scott boy to the ground and jumped on him.

GOV. SMITH DOOMS REAPPORTIONMENT

THEY FIND SOME BALM

Leaving Representation as It Is Will Prevent Contests In Three Upstate Counties.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 15.—Republican law makers are aware that Governor Smith will veto their Senate reapportionment bill over which midnight oil is being burned tonight, preparatory to its introduction in the Senate and Assembly tomorrow.

From what Governor Smith has learned regarding its provisions from Democratic members of the Senate and Assembly reapportionment committees he is said to be convinced that the bill in its completed form will be a measure which no Governor conscientiously could sign. He is said to have so told Republican law makers with whom he has been in touch recently.

If the Governor vetoes the bill the Republican leaders will shed no tears. They are perfectly reconciled to adverse action and satisfied to have the status quo preserved for the present, in the vague hope that next year will see a Republican chief executive who will approve any Republican reapportionment within reason.

Hence the Republicans have not taken very seriously the laborious task of preparing a new Senate map for the State and a measure that ordinarily would be highly important will not receive consideration until the closing moments of the session. There has even been talk today of deferring adjournment for a day or two in order to put the reappointment bill through the various stages of established procedure without indecent haste.

See Benefit in Veto.

While members of the two reapportionment committees with the aid of advisers sent up by the Republican organization in New York City were tinkering with district lines in the five boroughs so as to get the most they could out of it for Republican Senate and Assembly candidates of the future, up-State Republicans admitted that they felt comparatively little concern in the framing of the bill.

In one respect the Republican leaders feel their party will be benefited by a veto. In the allotment of Assembly districts, which is a function of the Legislature through the carving out of the districts themselves, falls to the lot of the Aldermen in New York City and Common Councils in up-State localities, it was found impossible to avoid cutting down the representation of three Republican counties in the Assembly in order to keep the total number of Assembly districts within the limitation of 150 fixed in the Constitution.

The three counties affected are St. Lawrence, Steuben and Dutchess, each with two Assemblymen in the present Legislature. Under the new reapportionment they would have only one each. In each instance contention is brewing between Assemblymen, each feeling himself entitled to re-election. In St. Lawrence Mrs. Rhoda Fox Graves, the lone woman member of the present Assembly, on whose re-election Republican women all over the State have set their hearts, would become involved in a contest which would add a further complication, especially as her male colleague from St. Lawrence, Walter L. Pratt, has a seniority claim to the seat, in addition to having strong local backing.

Democrats Primed for Attack.

The Democrats are preparing tonight for a united attack on the measure the moment it appears on the calendar in either house. By a house-to-house canvass in New York City, the Democrats have accumulated a great volume of ammunition in the form of affidavits tending to show a studied effort to have the 1925 census, which was conducted under Republican auspices, pave the way for a reduction in representation in Manhattan altogether out of proportion to any falling off in population that actually may have been found.

BIG DAY IS PLANNED IN ORATORY CONTEST

More Than Forty Competitions Set for This Afternoon and Tonight.

KINGSTON HOLDS ITS FINALS

New York City and State and New Jersey Competitors Ready for District Trials.

More than forty borough, county and district contests are scheduled for this afternoon and tonight in New York City, New York State and New Jersey high schools, entered in the National Oratorical Contest on the Constitution, sponsored by THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The heavy calendar for the day sets a new high mark of activity in the competition. Not only will it indicate with virtual certainty most of the $50 district prize winners, but it will probably also bring to light several heretofore "under cover" favorites for the $1,000 final prize, the trip to Europe and the other major prizes.

All five boroughs of New York City will hold their final contests today and there will be district finals in Newark and Englewood, N. J.

County contests, preliminary to district tests a week hence, will be held in New York State from the Catskills to the Adirondacks, and from Westchester County to the Lake Ontario area.
